For several autumns I have made a tour to the far west, and one autumn, about this time, saw that which I shall never forget. I have seen the autumnal sketches of Cropsey and other skilful pencils, but that week I saw a pageant two thousand miles long. Let artists stand back when God stretches his canvas! A grander spectacle was never kindled before mortal eyes. Along by the rivers, and up and down the sides of the great hills, and by the banks of the lakes, there was an indescribable mingling of gold, and orange, and crimson, and saffron, now sobering into drab and maroon, now flaming into solferino and scarlet. Here and there the trees looked as if just their tips had blossomed into fire. In the morning light the forests seemed as if they had been transfigured, and in the evening hour they looked as if the sunset had burst and dropped upon the leaves. In more sequestered spots, where the frosts had been hindered in their work, we saw the first kindling of the flames of color in a lowly sprig; then they rushed up from branch to branch, until the glory of the Lord submerged the forest. Here you would find a tree just making up its mind to change, and there one looked as if, wounded at every pore, it stood bathed in carnage. Along the banks of Lake Huron there were hills over which there seemed pouring cataracts of fire, tossed up and down, and every whither by the rocks. Through some of the ravines we saw occasionally a foaming stream, as though it were rushing to put out the conflagration. If at one end of the woods a commanding tree would set up its crimson banner, the whole forest prepared to follow. If God's urn of colors were not infinite, one swamp that I saw along the Maumee would have exhausted it forever. It seemed as if the sea of divine glory had dashed its surf to the tip top of the Alleghanies, and then it had come dripping down to the lowest leaf and deepest cavern.

Most persons preaching from this text find only in it a vein of sadness. I find that I have two strings to this gospel harp—a string of sadness, and a string of joy infinite.

"We all do fade as a leaf."

First. Like the foliage, we fade gradually. The leaves which, week before last, felt the frost, have, day by day, been changing in tint, and will for many days yet cling to the bough, waiting for the fist of the wind to strike them. Suppose you that the pictured leaf that you hold in your hand took on its color in an hour, or in a day, or in a week? No. Deeper and and deeper the flush, till all the veins of its life now seem opened and bleeding away. After a while, leaf after leaf, they fall. Now those on the outer branches, then those most hidden, until the last spark of the gleaming forge shall have been quenched.

So gradually we pass away. From day to day we hardly see the change. But the frosts have touched us. The work of decay is going on. Now a slight cold. Now a season of overfatigue. Now a fever. Now a stitch in the side. Now a neuralgic thrust. Now a rheumatic twinge. Now a fall. Little by little. Pain by pain. Less steady of limb. Sight not clear. Ear not so alert. After a while we take a staff. Then, after much resistance, we come to spectacles. Instead of bounding into the vehicle, we are willing to be helped in. At last the octogenarian falls. Forty years of decaying. No sudden change. No fierce cannonading of the batteries of life; but a fading away—slowly—gradually. As the leaf! As the leaf!

Again: Like the leaf we fade, to make room for others; Next year's forests will be as grandly foliaged as this. There are other generations of oak leaves to take the place of those which this autumn perish. Next May the cradle of the wind will rock the young buds. The woods will be all a-hum with the chorus of leafy voices. If the tree in front of your house, like Elijah, takes a chariot of fire, its mantle will fall upon Elisha. If, in the blast of these autumnal batteries, so many ranks fall, there are reserve forces to take their place to defend the fortress of the hills. The beaters of gold leaf will have more gold leaf to beat. The crown that drops today from the head of the oak will be picked up and handed down for other kings to wear. Let the blasts come. They only make room for other life.

So, when we go, others take our spheres. We do not grudge the future generations their places. We will have had our good time. Let them come on and have their good time. There is no sighing among these leaves today, because other leaves are to follow them. After a lifetime of preaching, doctoring, selling, sewing, or digging, let us cheerfully give way for those who come in to do the preaching, doctoring, selling, sewing and digging. God grant that their life may be brighter than ours has been! As we get older, do not let us be affronted if young men and women crowd us a little. We will have had our day and we must let them have theirs. When our voices get cracked, let us not snarl at those who can warble. When our knees are stiffened, let us have patience with those who go fleet as the deer. Because our leaf is fading, do not let us despise the unfrosted. Autumn must not envy the spring. Old men must be patient with boys. Dr. Guthrie stood up in Scotland and said, "You need not think I am old because my hair is white; I never was so young as I am now." I look back to my childhood days, and remember when, in winter nights, in the sitting-room, the children played, the blithest and the gayest of all the company were father and mother. Although reaching fourscore years of age, they never got old.

Again: As with the leaves, we fade and fall amid myriads of others. One cannot count the number of plumes which these frosts are plucking from the hills. They will strew all the streams; they will drift into the caverns; they will soften the wild beast's lair, and fill the eagle's eyrie.

All the aisles of the forest will be covered with their carpet, and the steps of the hills glow with a wealth of color and shape that will defy the looms of Axminster. What urn could hold the ashes of all these dead leaves? Who could count the hosts that burn on this funeral pyre of the mountains?

So we die in concert. The clock that strikes the hour of our going will sound the going of many thousands. Keeping step with the feet of those who carry us out will be the tramp of hundreds doing the same errand. Between fifty and seventy people every day lie down in Greenwood. That place has over two hundred thousand of the dead. I said to the man at the gate, "Then if there are so many here, you must have the largest cemetery." He said there were two Roman Catholic cemeteries in the city, each of which had more than this. We are all dying. London and Pekin are not the great cities of the world. The grave is the great city. It hath mightier population, longer streets, brighter lights, thicker darknesses. Caesar is there, and all his subjects. Nero is there, and all his victims. City of kings and paupers! It has swallowed up in its immigrations Thebes, and Tyre and Babylon, and will swallow all our cities. Yet, City of Silence. No voice. No hoof. No wheel. No clash. No smiting of hammer. No clack of flying loom. No jar. No whisper. Great City of Silence. Of all its million million hands, not one of them is lifted. Of all its million million eyes, not one of them sparkles. Of all its million million hearts, not one pulsates. The living are in small minority.

Again: As with variety of appearance the leaves depart, so do we. You have noticed that some trees, at the first touch of the frost, lose all their beauty; they stand withered, and uncomely, and ragged, waiting for the northeast storm to drive them into the mire. The sun shining at noonday gilds them with no beauty. Ragged leaves! Dead leaves! No one stands to study them. They are gathered in no vase. They are hung on no wall. So death smites many. There is no beauty in their departure. One sharp frost of sickness, or one blast off the cold waters, and they are gone. No tinge of hope. No prophecy of heaven. Their spring was all abloom with bright prospects; their summer thick foliaged with opportunities; but October came, and their glory went. Frosted! In early autumn the frosts come, but do not seem to damage vegetation. They are light frosts. But some morning you look out of the window and say, "There was a black frost last night," and you know that from that day everything will wither. So men seem to get along without religion, amid the annoyances and vexations of life that nip them slightly here and nip them there. But after awhile death comes. It is a black frost, and all is ended. * * *

Why go to the death-bed of distinguished men, when there is hardly a house on this street but from it a Christian has departed? When your baby died there were enough angels in the room to have chanted a coronation. When your father died you sat watching, and after awhile felt of his wrist, and then put your hand under his arm to see if there were any warmth left, and placed the mirror to the mouth to see if there were any sign of breathing; and when all was over, you thought how grandly he slept—a giant resting after a battle. Oh! there are many Christian death-beds. The chariots of God, come to take his children home, are speeding every-whither. This one halts at the gate of the almshouse; that one at the gate of princes. The shout of captives breaking their chains comes on the morning air. The heavens ring again and again with the coronation. The twelve gates of heaven are crowded with the ascending righteous. I see the accumulated glories of a thousand Christian death-beds—an autumnal forest illumined by an autumnal sunset! They died not in shame, but in triumph! As the leaf! As the leaf!

Lastly: As the leaves fade and fall only to rise, so do we. All this golden shower of the woods is making the ground richer, and in the juice, and sap, and life of the tree the leaves will come up again. Next May the south wind will blow the resurrection trumpet, and they will rise. So we fall in the dust only to rise again. "The hour is coming when all who are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth." It would be a horrible consideration to think that our bodies were always to lie in the ground. However beautiful the flowers you plant there, we do not want to make our everlasting residence in such a place. * * *

Crossing the Atlantic the ship may founder, and our bodies be eaten by the sharks; but God tameth leviathan, and we shall come again. In awful explosion of factory boiler our bodies may be shattered into a hundred fragments in the air; but God watches the disaster, and we shall come again. He will drag the deep, and ransack the tomb, and upturn the wilderness, and torture the mountain, but he will find us, and fetch us out and up to judgment and to victory. We shall come up with perfect eye, with perfect hand, with perfect foot, and with perfect body. All our weaknesses left behind.

We fall, but we rise; we die, but we live again! We moulder away, but we come to higher unfolding! As the leaf! As the leaf!

Lord Rosebery's First Speech.

Lord Rosebery's first speech was delivered when the future premier was fourteen years of age, at a dinner to volunteers given by his grandfather. He had even then his cool self-possession, and the speech—in acknowledgment of a vote of thanks to his grandfather—was considered a very good effort for one so young.

The Air After a Snowfall.

The air, after a heavy snowfall, or shower, is usually very clear, because the snow or rain in falling brings down with it most of the dust and impurities, and leaves the atmosphere exceedingly clear.

EX-SPEAKER CRISP DEAD.

World's Wheat Supply Short.

LONDON, Oct. 2-Beerbohm's Corn Trade List, in a review of the week, says: "Although the wheat market is apt to go to extremes and a decided reaction has occurred, the general conditions surrounding the market are unchanged and the trade need not lose confidence that the world's visible supply is less than in any year since 1891. The price ought to keep up to a level of at least 35s. Any return to low prices will probably be prevented by a rise the freight rates."

THESE NEWS.

The official of the Bank of Ecuador, located at Guyaquil, succeeded a few days ago in opening for the first time since the great fire the vaults of that institution. To their great satisfaction they found that paper money, documents and books, not to mention the coin contained in the vaults, to be in perfect condition. This will tend to restore confidence, and will lead to an earlier resumption of business than was at first anticipated.

A correspondent in Cienfuegos, Cuba, recently telegraphed that the gunboats Cadilla and Contramaestre had an engagement with filibusters lasting five hours, at the mouth of the San Juan river. They subjected the enemy to disastrous defeat and captured 60 rifles, artillery accoutrements, a great quantity of machetes, munitions, medicines, clothing, various rebel flags, revolutionary documents of importance and two yawl boats lettered The Dauntless."

New York dispatch: One hundred and sixty-seven Armenians have arrived from Europe, to which country they fled from Turkish atrocities. They were transferred to Ellis Island for inspection by the health officers. They were met by representatives of the Salation Army, the Red Cross Society and the Woman's Temperance Union. The health officers have not yet decided whether to permit them to land or send them back. The question may be referred to the secretary of the treasury.

Madrid dispatch: In an interview with Premier Canovas, he characterized as absolutely false and ridiculous the statement to the effect that the Spanish government intended abandoning Cuba in March. Regarding the report that Mr. Cleveland intended taking action in favor of the insurgents, Canovas says the government has received advices from Washington to quite the contrary effect. Naturally the United States government desires for many reasons to see an early termination of the war, but further than that, nothing can exceed the loyal conduct of Cleveland and the cabinet toward Spain and the government.

Havana dispatch: Weyler and Blanco will be recalled, Premier Canovas will fall and grave events will occur in Spain, Madrid dispatches say, and it is believed there unless the rebels in Cula and the Philippine Islands are conquered within a month. The Madrid press openly attacks Canovas and Weyler because of their inability to check the Cuban revolution. The Neuvo Mundo violently attacks Weyler, saying that under his command the Cuban revolt has assumed greater proportions than when Campos was in Cuba and that if in a month's time after the arrival of the reinforcements he does not deal a finishing blow to the rebellion he will be treated worse than Campos was.

It is estimated by stock handlers in the counties in the southeastern portion of the state of South Dakota that cholera has up to the present time killed at least 30 per cent of the hogs. In Yankton and Bonhomme counties, where the disease is the worst, the loss is estimated at 50,000 for each county, while there are smaller looses in the counties of Clay, Union, Lincoln and Minnehaha. In the worst affected districts some farmers report losses of whole herds. Prices have advanced 25 cents per hundred, and if the disease does not abate will further advance, as many farmers will be compelled to completely restock their farms. The losses are already into the thousands.

Duty is not measured by desire. but by possibility. We will never be given great things to do if we neglect the doing of small things.

Many people are in the habit of saying: "While I have great respect for you, I have none for your opinions". We can have respect for another mans children without adopting them. Can we not have respect for a friends opinions without adopting them? Why cannot the head be as generous as the heart.

Some men do not fancy the idea of having been evolved from monkeys. As yet we are ignorant of how the monkeys feel about it. We have never heard of a monkey becoming a man but we have seen men descend to monkeys. One would infer from this, that while monkeys do not believe in evolution, men do believe in devolution.

Faith is a telescope—it brings to view the invisible. A believer's eye at the object glass can see futher than Neptune. The skeptic thinks he takes a broad vew of heavenly things when he looks through the end of the telescope. Rabbits Cause Diphtheria.

Spescial; Rabbits have caused an epidemic of diphtheria in the eastern part of this county that has spread to Dows, Iowa Falls, Jewell Junction, and Alden. No less than a dozen deaths are reported. For the past five years diphtheria has annually broken out in the immediate vicinity of Tybithra Lutheran churh, which is used as a school building. A large number of rabbits have been hibernating in that building for a long time and the physicians have reached the conclusion that the dittle animals have planted the germs of the desease which spread among the children. A most terrible accident occurred in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Blank of this city. On wensday evening last about 6 o'cloch a iittle daughter four years of age was in some manner fatally burned during the temporary absence of its mother. In some way the childs clothing caught fire from the stove and before the flames could be sub dued it received such injuries that on the Thursday night following death came to the little one's relief. The sympathies of the whole community goes out to the parents in this the hour of their great bereavement.

The little one was buried from the German methodist church last Sunday afternoon.

Ex-Governor Larabee showed his generosity again last week. He held a note for three hundred dollars against Robert Gallion for land rent. Butter is going up. Grain is also going up, but not nearly so fast as butter in porportion.

Butter sold at twenty cents at Eglin ltst week. But that was good butter, the very best in fact. Store butter, taken to the store in irregular chunks done up in a cloth, won't sell for twenty cents—not this winter.

Calves that have some beef blood in them will pay a good price for skimmilk and corn meal now. It seems that we have a well developed scarcity of cattle ofthe right kind. Well bred and well fed cattle will bring good money during the next two or three years. Nor will it pay to ignore almost any kind of a calf.

A warm and comfortable barn —not necessarily an expensive one—will save large quantities of feed, not only one year but every year. The German who builds his barn first and then his house is level-headed. He reasons that if he builds the house first he may never save enough to build the barn, but if he builds the barn first he is likely to be able to build a nicer house—and pay for it when built.

The amount of butter that can be made from one hundred pounds of milk depends on the milk. One cow will give milk from which six or possibly seven pounds of butter can be made. while the milk from another cow that probably eats just as much requires just as much care to keep will yield but three and a half or four pounds of butter to one hundred pounds of milk. Thats the difference between a good cow and a poor one.

As the Mason City train was leaving Clarion for the south Saturday morning and while it was in motion, James Meab tried to help Mrs. Willard Mason on the front of the first passenger coach. She missed her footing and fell between the cars. Mr. Meab also fell. One of his limbs fell across the rails, but he quickly pulled it in, and as they lay on the ties the train went on, both cars passing over them. They were assisted to their feet and found to be uninjured.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

"God biess you, sir. If ever Charles Collinwood can serve your son, believe me, it shall be done. Heaven will reward you."

This was Mr. Vernon's parting with the admiral. Both were conscious of a subtle, mysterious whisper, telling them it was their last meeting on earth—and so it was.

That of Walter and Eleanor was still more brief. The young hero forced back the wild tumult that clamored eagerly to ask of her one promise to remain faithful, and pallid and calm, held out his hand, saying earnestly:

"May heaven bless you with all the happiness it has for earth! Good-bye, Ellie."

She had come weeping and sobbing from his father's embrace. The blue eyes had drenched with their briny rain the soft rose of her cheek to a faded white; the sweet lips quivered sadly. Walter's eye took in all, yet he said only:

"Good-bye, Ellie!"

Eleanor had no voice to reply. Parting thus from the only friends she had ever known, with but a vague, unsatisfactory hope of some time, somewhere meeting them again, quite prostrated her sensitive temperament. Weeping, fainting, nearly broken-hearted, her uncle carried her in his arms back to the cabin, while Walter, with dry, burning eye and rigid lip, descended swiftly to the boat that was to take them back to the 'Hornet.'

In silent grief his father took a place beside him. The word was given to cast off, when suddenly the admiral himself appeared above, leaning over the railing and calling Walter's name. He threw down a ring wrapped in a slip of paper. Walter grasped it nervously. Full well he knew the ring; many a time had Ellie brought it out to see the sparkles play in the sunshine that came flickering through the Hibiscus and palm trees; but he stopped not to examine it anew, but spread out the paper to read the brief line written there. Hurried, blotted as they were, no diamond in England or India could be so precious to Walter Vernon, though they were only these: "I shall wait for you, Walter."

Walter's face was covered by his hands, but the straight, shapely fingers could not hide the tears that at length came pouring through them.

CHAPTER X.

FIVE years after the 'Hornet' and 'Collinwood' parted company upon the ocean, was gathered in merrie England, at a famous gallery of paintings in London, a fashionable crowd—the living tide swaying to and fro, yet lingering ever, some for Art's dear sake, and some from obedience to a more tyrannical mistress—Fashion—at a group of pictures which bore the mark of a new genius, whose star had but lately shot up brilliantly on the sky of fame.

Upon a seat not far from these pictures sat a gentleman, whose foreign cloak and slouch hat nearly concealed his face and figure; only the brilliant, melancholy black eye roving restlessly over the crowd, and the glossy black moustache shading the scornful lip, were visible. There was a listless languor in his attitude that seemed belied by the keen attentiveness of his glance. Suddenly the eye sparkled in earnest attention, and quite unconsciously he bent eargerly forward. A gay party passing by floated toward him the sound of a well-known name.

"Lady Eleanor Collinwood—pray tell me in what direction you saw her?" asked eagerly an aristocratic-looking gentleman.

"Ah, there it is," spiritedly replied a brilliant-looking girl, twisting her pearl and gold opera glass affectedly, "you are no exception to the general rule. Viscount Somerset, the attractions of our new star outweigh all others. Were she not as lovely in character as in person, I should be jealous of her, but as it is, one must acquiesce gracefully. I give you full permission to leave us and find her. We saw her in their carriage with Lady Annabel and Sir Marcus Willoughby."

"Upon my word, Lady Isora, you are as keen and sharp as the frosty air of this November day. I assure you I find present company agreeable enough to keep me here until we meet or overtake the Collinwoods. I have a message for Lady Annabel from the admiral, whom I met at Bath. By the way, I fancied I discovered a likeness in that beautiful girl on the canvas yonder to Lady Eleanor. This Vernon keeps so private no one knows about him. Perhaps, after all, it was a glimpse of her face that inspired him to so grand an effort."

The gay talkers chattered on, unmindful of the eager listeners behind them. At length came a stir of expectation.

"Here they come, Somerset. See what a crowd of elite follows. You'll have little chance for conversation. How wonderful is the sway Lady Annabel holds over all hearts, with her pale, spiritual face and gentle dignity! See, the Duke of B—— is talking with her. Have you ever doubted she might be a duchess any day? But never was wife so faithful and devoted to a husband's memory as she. How she must have loved him!"

"Duchess! Yes, she might have had her choice of two or three coronets at the least. Everybody knows how our best and noblest men have sued in vain. She wins almost as much admiration as her daughter now."

"Hush, they will hear you! Good afternoon."

"A fine day, Lady Annabel. I have a word for you from Bath."

"Lady Annabel Collinwood, Eleanor's mother!"

At the very name came the flood of old emotion, sweeping away the breastwork that for five years of strenuous toil, of stupendous exertion, had been closely guarded, lest a single wave should overleap the restraining barrier.

No wonder Walter Vernon—Signor Vernoni he had allowed the Italians to call him, and the name came with his fame to England—no wonder he gazed with breathless interest as the group advanced, to see for the first time Lady Annabel Collinwood!

He could have selected her from a crowd of ladies as fair and graceful as she—a slender, pale-faced woman, with a well-bred, quiet grace, deep, mournful eyes—not like Eleanor's, blue and sunny, but dim and dark as the midnight sea, carrying with her a nameless, invisible and yet potent atmosphere of refinement and purity. This he saw at first, but a second look showed him flashes of light corruscating over the dim iris, and making the eye resplendent; waves of rich thought breaking over the symmetrical features, and glorifying them with light and shade of eloquent meaning; smiles rare and seldom, but wonderful and magical when they came, arching into beauty the lips that were Eleanor's own. He felt at once the spell by which Lady Annabel still swayed all hearts, although more than forty years had passed over her smooth, fair forehead. She was leaning lightly upon the duke's arm, but her attention was given to the young viscount, who was relating in his lively way the meeting with the courteous admiral.

The tall figure and massive head of the noble duke concealed the couple who walked behind, and Walter was obliged to wait until Lady Annabel and her companion turned to the pictures before he beheld her for whom his heart had sighed so long.

Eleanor was only sixteen when they parted upon the far-off Pacific. Five years, replete with the important change from girlhood to womanhood, had passed—would she seem the same?

His beating heart nearly suffocated him as Walter once more gazed upon Lady Eleanor Collinwood.

Ah, the relief!—it was still his Ellie, though the youthful grace and beauty had ripened into matured perfection—though the slender form had grown more stately, and the girlish diffidence had merged into a calm, self-possessed dignity—a well-bred grace that the island experience could never have given her. Still the soft blue eyes wore their guileless look of pleading innocence; the sweet lips dimpled with the very smile poor Tom had so often compared to the first sunbeam that glistened through the cloud over the sea, when the "Petrel" lay a wreck among the reefs.

How swiftly his pulse leaped, his eye burned! Would that smile ever beam for him again? Not a breath of intelligence had passed between them since their parting; for all he knew she might have forgotten his very existence. He could test it speedily. And then, with jealous rage, the unknown artist turned to her companion, on whose handsome face so plainly was written his devoted admiration. There was a manly, high-bred air about him that pierced poor Walter like a sword. He was good, he was noble, he was worthy of her—that could be read at a glance. No wonder she listened so graciously to his animated words.

With a stifled groan Walter turned away. Duke, marquis, noble lord—whichever he was, he had a right to offer his homage and suit; but for the plebeian painter, where was there any hope, any plea whereby to win the favor of that high-born, aristocratic mother, even though Eleanor herself were true to that voluntary promise—"I will wait for you"?

The black folds of Lady Annabel's dress swept across his feet, and while the hot blood mounted his cheeks Walter bent his head, as though his presumptuous thoughts were laid bare before that sad, dark eye.

Then a single word in Eleanor's well-known voice came to his ear—it was hurried, agitated, vehement. So well he understood every tone of that beloved voice, he knew something had startled her, and yet she had spoken but one word—"Mother!"

"What is it, my love?" asked Lady Annabel, turning at once where her daughter, alternately flushing and paling, stood before the famous pictures that had won so much attention. They were evidently champion pictures, representing the same scene by daylight and at midnight—a high, steep point of land, jutting out into the sea, whose surf beat in frothy petulance against the reef. The feathery palm-tree canopy and gorgeous vines whose brilliant blossoms lay like garlands over the white rock, betrayed the tropic clime no more plainly than the intense blue of the over-arching sky. Nature was inexpressibly lovely, but the gazer's eye was caught and riveted by the human figures. A young girl, graceful and beautiful, was seated there like a queen upon her throne, and beside her, nearly at her feet, reclined a youth whose countenance was partially concealed as he was looking up eagerly into her face, which wore a wild, sorrowful, yearning look, as her eyes and extended hand pointed to the far-off line where sky and water met. Not one could gaze upon the picture and not know the whole was not yet comprehended—the story not half told.

CHAPTER XI.

ITS companion was dark in the background—a dim sky and stars showing faintly the outline of embowering tree; but upon the rock, instead of its queen, blazed a bonfire that lit up luridly the foamy sea, and gave a ruddy gleam to three figures waiting near—the youth and maiden and tall, grave man, who were all gazing off with a wild intensity of expression that gave a gloomy look to every face over the water.

"Ah, the pictures!" said Sir Clement Willoughby. "I have looked at them full an hour before, to-day. They are thrilling, are they not? I must seek out the artist; it will be an honor for any man to know him. That midnight is superb."

Eleanor stood with wild eyes that could not drink in eagerly enough the old familiar scene. Now the blue orbs kindled joyfully, and again the tears came welling over them.

"Oh, Walter, Walter!" cried she, in a tone of anguish that startled all and thrilled one heart with joy.

"What ails you, Eleanor?" asked her mother anxiously.

"Oh, mamma, take me home, and let us come alone. I must see the pictures alone."

The ladies and gentlemen gathered around her looked astonished and embarrassed.

"But my child," said her mother gravely, "we do not understand; you owe the company some word of explanation."

Eleanor struggled for composure, and dropping her veil over the flushed cheek and tearful eyes, said more collectedly:

"I was taken by surprise. It is our island home, mamma, and that is Walter and Mr. Vernon and myself. Oh, those well-known scenes—it breaks my heart to go back to them, and yet to know nothing of the friends who shared them with me! It was Walter who painted the pictures. Oh, I am sure it was Walter! I must see him—I must find him."

Lady Annabel turned hastily to the pictures, while a look of pain and annoyance swept across her face. She was evidently revolving some subject carefully in her mind, for after the first swift glance she dropped her eyes to the floor.

Sir Clement Willoughby was re-examining the pictures, more especially the first one. His eye wandered questioningly over the graceful form of the youth at the feet of the island queen, and when he turned to the other it was to catch what knowledge he could from the side glimpse of the boyish face.

ADVICE TO FARMERS.

By H. H. Carr & Co., the Farmer's Commission House.

We are in the midst of an exciting political campaign; the great cities are stirred by monster demonstrations. The great orators hold forth every night in halls, wigwams, and tents. Political leaders are busy figuring out the result in advance of the election. Thousands of men in the employ of the national committees are ascertaining as near as possible how each city ward, how each branch of organized labor, how each city will vote. One thing no man, no set of men, no campaign committee, no political party can tell in advance, that is, how the farmers of the country will vote. The one great question to-day is: How do the farmers feel about it? We mention this only to illustrate a point in practical business matters.

Agricultural workers are learning their power in politics. They can make or unmake state legislatures. They do it by imitating the methods of labor in cities, by working together. They do not need local unions. They can work in our grand intellectual union for their common good. They have done it in demanding legislation. They are doing it now in a way that makes leaders tremble. They will act more intelligently and united in the future. They find other things than politics to call for their decision. They produce what the world needs. They are studying new methods of giving the fruit of their labors to the world. Recently an army of 100,000 men marched through Chicago's streets celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the great fire. The farmers have for years fed a much greater army; not only fed, but made rich, presented with grain elevators, private banks, fine houses, costly luxuries, the old-time, ever-present army of middlemen. But there is a revolt against dividing profits with this army between the farm and the world's big markets.

This independent action began with this pioneer farmer's commission house. It is assuming proportions which make the easy money-makers (professional shippers) at the stations over a dozen states tributary to Chicago tremble. The question: "What are the farmers going to do?" bothers not politicians alone, but all those who have been getting something for nothing. Farmers are going to ship their own grain —not a few or a hundred, but an army of thousands. They know how, they have tried it, it pays. That is one question answered by farmers.

See what a few farmers say who have tried shipping:

SULTAN MEANS TO FIGHT.

Imposition of a War Tax Regarded As a Serious Matter.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—The receipt of dispatches from Constantinople announcing that the imposition of a poll tax of 5 piasters per head and the levying of other taxes in order to arm the Mussulmans, has caused the situation there to assume a very grave aspect and has increased the anxiety felt here regarding the outcome of the eastern imbroglio. The Speaker, discussing the matter, says: "The new war tax is a sign that the sultan means to fight, and, if possible, carrying out the fresh massacres of Christians, which are daily expected. The 'sick man,' we trust, is nearing his death struggle. There is little doubt in the public mind that an arrangement for joint European action exists, and at present it is only resisted by one power." The Speaker's well informed Constantinople correspondent, however, doubts the existence of such an arrangement.

DAUNTLESS CAPTURED.

The Filibustering Steamer Run Down by the United States Cruiser Raleigh.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Oct. 23.—Off New Smurna bar the United States cruiser Raleigh captured the filibustering steamer Dauntless and her tender, S. L. Mabrey. The latter steamer was putting out to sea with coal and supplies for the Dauntless when the Raleigh fired a blank cartridge for her to stop. The Mabrey turned about and tried to escape, whereupon the Raleigh fired a solid shot across her bows and the tug hove to. An officer was put in charge of the Mabrey and the Dauntless was brought to St. John's bar and now lies inside, in charge of the officers of the Raleigh. Cubans in Jacksonville are greatly excited, but claim that the Dauntless had no arms nor men on board. In chasing and capturing the Dauntless, the Raleigh used her guns several times and the alleged filibuster came near being sunk.

The Money Came Too Late.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 24.—Mrs. Kate Bascom, of Clinton, Mo., killed herself and her 4-year-old son, George, at a lodging house by closing the door and windows and turning on the gas. Mrs. Bascom went to the rooming house a few days previous. She went without money but said she expected money by every mail from her husband at Clinton. Day after day passed, the money did not come, and she became so despondent that she resolved to kill herself and her son. The letter containing the money finally came and when the house keeper went to Mrs. Bascom's room with it, she found the mother and son dead.

SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY.

Results of Eight Years' Experiments Presented.

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.—Orange Judd Farmer, of Chicago, publishes the results of eight years' experiments in sugar beet culture all over Minnesota, prepared by Prof. Snyder, of the Minnesota Experiment Station. The article shows that Minnesota produces an average of 15 tons per acre of beets richer in sugar contents than is the case in Europe, where the industry is remarkably developed. The sugar is also of a high degree of purity. It also appears from these elaborate, extensive and long continued experiments that the cost of raising sugar beets in Minnesota is from $2 to $3 per ton. Orange Judd Farmer points out that if sugar factories are established to buy these beets at $4 to $5 per ton, farmers can make $1.50 to $2.50 per ton net profit. At less than the average yield of fifteen tons of dressed beets per acre, this industry opens up a home market for a new crop that will easily pay $15 to $30 per acre net profit, besides paying in cash a fair price for all labor on the crop, use of land, etc. Equally satisfactory results have been obtained in Wisconsin and the northwest generally. Director Wilson, of the Iowa Experiment Station, says that only capital and skill are necessary for that state alone to produce all of the $100,000,000 worth of sugar now imported every year.

SPANISH EDITOR INCENSED.

Probable American Intervention in Cuba Evokes Indignant Protest.

Madrid dispatch: Commenting upon the statement contained in a dispatch from Washington that President Cleveland intends to intervene in Cuba in a manner tantamount to the recognition of the independence of the insurgents, the Imparcial declares that Spain ought to demand a full explanation of the Washington government. "She cannot brook such a threat over her head," continues the Imparcial, "even for a single day. By what right does the United States define the time for Spain to settle a question of her internal administration? It must be affirmed before the whole world that the United States cannot impose any sort of terms upon us." After denouncing the United States' "fictional neutrality," the Imparcial concludes as follows: "The conduct of the United States will arouse general indignation. If Spain should remain alone in a conflict with the United States, Spaniards, by their own efforts, will know how to mark the difference between the noble defenders of their own property and the vile traffickers at Washington."

ARMENIANS WIPED OUT.

Merciless Kurds Leave No Armenians in the Van District.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—The St. Petersburg Niedomosti gives details of the Van massacre, secured from fugitives who have arrived at Elchmiadzin. They say that no Armenians are left in the Van district. The Kurds, declaring that they were executing the sultan's will, mercilessly butchered the men, kidnapped the prettiest women and girls, and threw the children into the pits intended for storing corn and buried them alive in order to save ammunition. The male victims were arranged in rows and were killed, two and three at a single shot. The details of the outrages on the priests and temples and the sacred books and vessels are revolting.

There is work in the world for every man to do, but some of them are fortunate enough to be able to hire some one else to do it.

Laws that are not needed drag those which are into disrepute.

When bank robbers try to escape on bicycles they generally get tired.

If men and women were not imitative animals there would be no fashions.

It is not so much the size of his place as the way he fills it that reflects credit on a man.

The evidence seems to show that Mrs. Castle is another victim of unconscious assimilation.

As an abstract proposition each man thinks he is the only individual on earth that knows how to treat a woman properly.

The balloon sleeve is to go, but the chances are that the eight or ten yards of cloth will be used in some other part of the fashionable costume.

When his eighth daughter arrived last week an Iowa editor, chronicling the event, remarked: "Everything appears to be coming our way."

George Roatch of Kalamazoo couldn't wait for the election so he cut his throat. The only explanation found in the telegram is that "he brooded over politics." Don't brood over anything, least of all politics. Some people make us very tired.

A new scheme for forwarding letters from Cuba to this country has been devised by a New York postage stamp dealer. He has stamps sent him from Cuba and letters are concealed in the wrappings which protect the stamps. Several important letters have recently been received in New York by this means which otherwise would never have escaped the strict censorship regarding outgoing mails.

Emma Goldman is out with a petition signed by some Pennsylvania socialists and anarchists for the purpose of securing a pardon for Alexander Berkman, the young New York anarchist who tried to kill H. C. Frick some years ago. He was sentenced to state's prison for twenty-seven years. The press reports intimate that Mr. Frick himself will sign the petition. Can this be really true?

Beware of ginger cordial. An eminently respectable New York woman, 19 years old and mother of numerous grown-up children, was obliged to face a police justice the other day on a charge of intoxication, and investigation showed that a drink of ginger cordial taken at a druggist's for a passing indisposition was the cause of the whole trouble. Incidentally this story is recommended to married men who sometimes come home in a more or less shattered condition.

George du Maurier's last portrait of himself pictured a man faintly resembling the author of Trilby and provided with the wings of an angel and the tail and hoofs of—something else, says the New York Times. Over it he wrote: "Some seem to think he's got wings like an angel; some that's he's got a cloven foot and a forked tail. He is quite an ordinary little man, I assure you," and in French, "An old little commonplace chap, neither good nor bad, and very much annoyed because so much fuss is made about him."

Here is a curious item. A man living just outside Atlanta has grown three acres of "leafless" cotton, the plants averaging from seven to fourteen feet high and producing to the plant (without greater exhaustion to the soil, it is claimed) more than five times as much cotton as the ordinary plant. Yesterday he was visited by a committee from the southern part of Georgia offering him $18,000 for all his plants and seed, for the purpose of destroying them. Naturally he did not accept the offer, which savors of the middle ages. He has sent an offer of forty bushels of the seed to the New Orleans exchange for $20,000, which will be accepted.

Constable Quigley of Paterson, N. J., has a contract on his hands of which he would like to be rid. Washburn's circus stranded in that city, and some of the people who had money coming to them from the show attached Lady Blenheim, a hippopotamus belonging to the menagerie department. Quigley served the attachment and took charge of the coy young lady, but since he has discovered that she eats eight bales of hay daily, and also has to be milked. Moreover, she dislikes strangers and has nearly done up the good Quigley several times. The bold constable is now endeavoring to get rid of the heavy-weight dame, thus displaying a lack of gallantry truly deplorable.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

SUIDIDE OF J. B. LONG.

A Pleasantville Stockmen Kills Himself in a Colorado Hotel.

DENVER, Oct. 30.—J. B. Long, a cattleman of Pleasantville, Iowa, arrived at the hotel Oxford and after transacting some business at the stock yards returned to the hotel, and went to his room. After writing two telegrams, one to the National Bank of the Republic, Chicago, and another to the Citizen's National Bank of Pleasantville, stopping payment on three drafts for $1,000 each, drawn on the National Bank of the Republic—Long wrote a letter, stating that he had been robbed of the drafts, and directing that his body be shipped to Monroe, Iowa, care of the Masonic lodge of that town, he shot himself in the mouth with a revolver and died instantly. Two drafts for $1,000 each and $45 in cash were found in the dead man's pockets. Long gave no reason in the letter for committing the deed and the supposition is that he became despondent over the loss of his money.

UNSUCCESSFUL BURGLARS.

Got the Money, But a Posse Soon Captured Them.

RUNNELLS, Oct. 30.—Burglars entered C. B. Osborn's general store by breaking out a glass in the door. They then blew his safe open, securing about $100. Two men were seen by Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Kline, of the Runnells House, to leave the store between 2 and 3 o'clock and go west. A posse started out about 4 a. m., and the thieves were caught in the school house at East Thirtieth and Dean avenue, Des Moines. They had started a fire in the school room stove and smoke from the chimney was a give-away to the posse, who had about given up the search. The building was surrounded and the prisoners arrested without resistance. They had all the money in a hat, but no tools were found on them.

IOWA FORGER CAUGHT.

Fritz Jensen Escaped for a Time But Was Finally Captured.

ATLANTIC, Oct. 31.—Fritz Tonopodan, alias Johnson, alias Jensen, is now in the county jail awaiting the action of the grand jury on the charge of forgery. Last December he sold a forged check for $177, drawn on H. Fulton, to A. Alstine, of Marne, and left the country. Sheriff Card captured him at Ogden.

WEALTHY FARMER MAY DIE.

ATLANTIC, Nov. 1.—Lewis Gingery, son of one of Cass county's wealthiest farmers, is not expected to live, because of the bursting of a shotgun. The stock flying back crushed the frontal bone of the skull and filled the eyeballs full of powder. He was fighting several chicken hawks at the time of the accident.

Youths Turn Desperadoes.

CLINTON, Oct. 30.—Two boys, aged about 17 and 18, who had been working on a farm in the northern part of the county until a few days ago, suddenly became outlaws. At Andover, a few miles northwest of Clinton, they went into a store and being refused ammunition for a rifle and revolvers they carried, shot through the ceiling. From there they went to the Northwestern depot and broke into it, securing some $5 in money. They then came to Lyons, crossing to Fulton, Ill. where they were taken into custody by a railroad detective and brought to Clinton, placed in jail and bound over in $1,000. They gave the names of Henry Smith of Bellevue and Roy Wright of Pierson.

Swindled by a Forged Draft.

SIOUX CITY, Oct. 31.—A stranger got a $75 diamond from Wm. Hiles, a jeweler, by a clever forgery. He went to the store in the afternoon, talked politics and made himself agreeable. He represented himself as an agent for a Cleveland oil firm and appeared to be wealthy. He looked at some diamonds and finally selected one. In the evening he called and said he would take it, and tendered a draft in payment, signed by Harry M. Geary, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Cleveland, made out in the name of James L. Carter. He indorsed this name upon it, and got the diamond. Later it was discovered that the draft was a forgery.

Dining Car Saloon Keeper Indicted.

MASON CITY, Oct. 29.—The grand jury of Hancock county has returned an indictment against J. J. McCoy for the illegal sale of liquor. McCoy ran a dining car on the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul road, and, it is alleged, sold liquor contrary to the Iowa law. Although liquor has been served on dining cars on many roads since the passage of the prohibitory law, this, it is believed, is the first prosecution.

BURGLARS AT GOLDFIELD.

Bold Attempt is Made to Rob the Citizen's Bank.

MASON CITY, Nov. 1.—A desperate attempt was made to rob the Citizen's State bank at Goldfield. Dynamite was placed in the front door and the explosion was so severe as to shake the entire town. Window glass were broken in several places, and the two-story brick structure in which the bank is located was partially wrecked. The entire body of citizens were soon drawn to the scene and the burglars escaped. The bank is owned by McElhiney Bros. There is no clue to the robbers.

Farmer Found Dead.

OSKALOOSA, Oct. 30.—James Brower, a bachelor, living alone on his farm near this city, was found dead in the barn yard. The body showed no marks of violence and no foul play is suspected. He is known to have been troubled with neuralgia of the stomach, and it is thought this may have caused his death.

Suicide at Burlington.

BURLINGTON, Nov. 1.—Mrs. Louisa Bradley, a highly respected resident of Burlington, committed suicide by taking morphine. She had been troubled with a cancer, and it is supposed she took this means of ending her sufferings. She was found dead in a woodshed by her daughter.

BREVITIES.

A handsomely illustrated catalogue of that great school at Des Moines—Highland Park College—can be secured free by addressing the principal, C. C. Rearick.

H. B. Porter, of Titusville, Pa., while hunting near Rock Rapids, in attempting to drag his gun through a fence, was shot and instantly killed. He owned several farms in northwestern Iowa and had been spending the summer inspecting them.

Fire broke out in Goff's livery barn at Weldon completely destroying it and McCullough's restaurant and barber shop adjoining. The movable property of both buildings was saved, but the buildings were totally destroyed. The total loss is $1,800 to $2,000, with about $1,000 insurance.

Mrs. Frances Fry has commenced suit in the district court at Cedar Rapids against Mrs. Jane Stinson, asking of her damages in the sum of $10,000 for the alienation and destruction of the affection of her husband for the plaintiff. Mrs. Stinson is an old resident of Linn county, living at Center Point, and is the possessor of much property. The suit has caused a big sensation.

The supreme court of Iowa has recently affirmed the opinion of the lower court in the case of John Puth vs. J. L. Zimbleman, executor of the estate of E. W. McFarland, deceased, appellant, from the Boone district court. This action was originally commenced by plaintiff against E. W. McFarland to recover damages for alienating the affection of his wife, and for a crime against society committed in 1894. The trial resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1.500. After the appeal of the defendant was taken, McFarland was killed by the father of a young girl whom he had ruined, and his executor was substituted as a party defendant.

Des Moines dispatch: Joseph Guittard, of Kansas, and R. C. Davis, who recently came to Des Moines to live, have filed suits for damages against J. J. Jones, of East Des Moines. They say they were swindled out of $14,000 in a land trade. Davis asserts that he gave 1,800 acres of land in Louisana for lots in Northwood Park and in East Des Moines. He says that Jones represented to him that the lots in Northwood Park were improved. The Kansas man says it was represented to him that the streets were paved and street cars close by. In fact, Norwood Park is in the northwestern part of the city and quite a distance from street car lines. Davis wants $10,000 damages and Guittard $4,000.

After a trial at Maquoketa lasting continuously since September 1, the famous Mott Watson case has closed. Judge Waterman has reserved his decision until he has considered the vast amount of evidence. The case has already cost thousands of dollars. Nearly four hundred witnesses, from seventeen states, have been examined during the trial. The vast volume of testimony in the case, coming as it does from all directions, has been procured at vast expense, estimated at not less than $15,000. In addition to this, the attorneys' fees will be somewhere from $25,000 to $100,000. Judge Waterman will file his decision as soon as possible, and at the same time do justice to the case. Each side affirms its resolution to carry the matter to the supreme court in case of defeat in this court.

ADVISES SPAIN TO QUIT.

London Globe Says Cuba Will Prove a White Elephant.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The Herald's London special says: The Globe, in an editorial, says should the insurrection last much longer Spain would not lose much by quitting her hold of Cuba. With the island's two staple industries ruined almost past mending, the termination of the rebellion must endow Spain, which is already hovering on the brink of bankruptcy, with a veritable white elephant, for long afterward it would have to maintain an army of occupation to prevent other uprisings, and the revenue receipts would be next to nothing. The Madrid treasury would have to find the money. In the presence of this dismal prospect the Spanish people would do well to consider the question whether Cuba is worth retaining. If it is, Spain should use all possible dispatch in accomplishing its pacification either by concession or conquest.

Hundreds of windows were blown out, walls were cracked and chimneys were torn down.

Slashed by a Woman.

DECATUR, Ind., Oct. 31.—A cutting affray took place in which the wives of two well known business men participated. While Mr. and Mrs. J. Chronister were on their way to church they were attacked by Mrs. M. Buhler, wife of the proprietor of the city roller mills, who accused Mrs. Chronister of alienating the affections of her husband, and at once began to carve the woman. Mr. Chronister, in his efforts to protect his wife, was also severely cut, and it is thought that neither can live.

The Constantinople Massacres.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 31.—The military commission appointed by the sultan to investigate the recent riots in Constantinople has submitted its report, which merely states the facts elicited. The commission estimates that the number of Armenians massacred was 2,250 and that 400 Mussulmans were killed.

TERSE NEWS.

The price of bread has gone up a half penny per loaf in London. The increase is acutely felt in the poorer districts.

Premier Canovas of Spain, says the reports recently circulated in the United States that Spain has not the resources necessary to continue the war in Cuba are unfounded.

The British steamer Taif, en route from Mauritius for Bombay, foundered at sea on September 24. Seventeen of her crew and passengers, all natives of India, were drowned. The remainder of the passengers and crew have arrived in Bombay.

Eight Spanish soldiers were shot in a conflict with the revolutionists at Sulu, the capital of the Sulu archipelago, and troops have been sent there by the governor of the Philippines, who has also armed a local force at Sulu.

London dispatch: The Marquis of Lansdowne, secretary of state for war, made an address on political issues at Leeds. The speaker expressed the belief that the Venezuelan question would soon be decided by an arbiter or by an amicable compromise. In the course of his address he said that the Indian government felt the gravest fears as to the possible loss of life from famine.

At Chicago recently fire broke out in one of the two immense grain elevators of the Chicago & Pacific Elevator Company at Cherry street and the north branch of the Chicago river. The flames soon got beyond control of the fire department and spread to the second elevator. Over 1,250,000 bushels of grain were destroyed. The Hales & Curtis Malting Company's building ignited from the heat of the burning elevators, but the fire was extinguished after hard fighting. The pecuniary loss will exceed a million dollars.

Washington dispatch: The Turkish government, according to reliable information, has noted the signatory powers of its intention to execute to the fullest extent the entire spirit of the reforms embraced in the treaty of Berlin. The measures to be adopted, it is learned, will carry the reforms not only into the six provinces of Turkey contemplated by the treaty and peopled by Armenians, but will embrace the entire empire. The authorities at Constantinople, it is added, have taken steps to counteract the public disfavor against Turkey, due, it is felt, to a lack of knowlege of the conditions surrounding the Armenian troubles.

Right Rev. Frederick Temple, D. D., says a cablegram, is now archbishop of Canterbury and primate of all England. The bishop of London has been translated to the primacy to succeed the late Edward White Benson, who was stricken with apoplexy while at service in the church of the Gladstones at Hawarden two weeks ago. Once the chaplain of the queen, Dr. Temple has enjoyed a royal favor that is credited with having elevated him in the honors of the established church. Archbishop Temple is already 75 years old, and it is half a century since he was ordained. He has had a distinguished career. He was a college instructor for many years, and enjoyed the distinction of having been one of the notable head masters of Rugby.

BY M. T. CALDOR.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION.

CHAPTER XI.—(CONTINUED.)

"Ah," thought he, "now I know why she listens so indifferently to my happiest words, and so dexterously avoids my declarations." And he sighed quite as forlornly as Walter had done.

Lady Annabel at last turned to her daughter.

"We will return home at once, my love, if you wish, and I will commission our kind friend, Viscount Somerset, to make inquiries concerning the artist. It is but proper that we should seek out your gallant preservers. I will also write to your uncle to come up from Bath to receive him. You know how eagerly he always sought after a trace of these Vernons."

Walter's lips writhed while he vowed mentally the name should yet stand proud and high even in aristocratic London. So in sullen silence he watched the group pass on toward the entrance out of sight. He rose up then and strode through the crowd.

The name of Lady Annabel Collinwood arrested his attention once again. The speakers were immediately in front of him.

"Lady Annabel? Oh, no, that is the Hon. Mrs. Dacre—she that was formerly Annabel Marston, of Lincolnshire, a distant relative, however, of Lady Collinwood's—she in the violet bonnet and gray pelisse, I mean."

A strange look of revengeful ire flashed over the gloom of Walter's face as he followed the direction given, and found the lady indicated—she that was once Annabel Marston of Lincolnshire.

She was a fair woman, with dark and rosy cheeks, whose beauty was so well preserved one might have easily believed her only thirty. She was talking gaily with a gentleman in uniform, and her clear, joyous laugh came musically to Walter's ears. He ground his teeth.

"She is happy, the traitress, and my wretched, ruined father sleeps in his ocean grave exiled by her from his native land," muttered he, as like a madman he tore his way to the street, and hurrying to his lodgings, flung himself into a chair and dropped his head upon his hands. For a short time he sat thus, and then rising, he unlocked a small box and took from thence a closely-written manuscript, which he perused attentively. Only the last of it is essential to the thread of our story:

"And now, Walter, you have the key to the mysterious sadness of my whole life—the dark secret that has eaten like the Spartan's vulture through my heart, finding its way only with my death to your knowledge. I do not fear, my son, that you will be harsh to your father's memory. I know you will see that, dreadful as was my sin, it was nothing to the web of wickedness that was wound around me—to the terrible atonement my life has made. Most of all, you will receive consolation in knowing Tom's Bible was the means of reconciling my soul with Heaven—of bringing to my restless, sorrowful heart the peace for which it had so long sighed. We are nearing the land every day—the land which for ten long years I have known only in my dreams; but I shall never set foot upon it. Too surely has the hand of death laid hold upon me. I heard you anxiously inquiring of the ship's surgeon the other day if there was nothing to help my cough. I could have answered what he evaded. Do not grieve for me; I shall be happy—so happy to lay off this cumbersome garment of flesh, these blind eyes of doubt. For you my son, I leave a rich legacy of experience to warn you away from the rocks that shipwrecked my peace and good name. I have no fear for your future. I know your artist name will be honorable—that the wealth I fail to leave will be more blessed won for yourself. One solemn charge only I give you—that is, to seek out, when once more you come to mingle with your countrymen in England, and speak with Annabel Marston—her name may be changed now. I flew from England the very morning after that wretched day. I have avoided all knowledge of the changes time may have brought, but you can easily find her. Tell her all that you have learned from these pages—of the utter horror that followed my happy parting with her; of the murdered spectre that strode everywhere at my side; of all the gloom and ruin that terrible day flung upon me; and then show her how peace and forgiveness came. Give her Tom's Bible; she will find all the places marked that refer to her guilt and mine; and say to her the last message of the man she wronged so terribly was utter forgiveness, and an earnest petition that she would also seek the only fountain that can wash away such sin. Other directions you will find in another place. I am exhausted, and must rest now."

Walter read it through, as I have said, and then with a groan he said:

"'Oh, my dead father, I have seen at last the woman for whose love you periled so much! She is admired and honored and happy, and you, her innocent victim, are lying in your unknown, unhonored grave!"

Presently his long, quivering sigh gave way to a more cheerful tone.

"One thing at least may comfort me, though all else be disheartening—Eleanor is unchanged. She remembers me as kindly as I should dare to ask. She is our island Ellie, for all her aristocratic relations. Well, I must be worthy of an entree into Lady Annabel's drawing-rooms. I must answer this flattering letter from his grace of G——. I hear he is a generous patron of the arts. He may make my advancement swifter. I shall elude all Lady Annabel's inquiries until I have a position her polished brow may not frown upon."

Signor Vernoni verified the proud resolves of Walter Vernon. The two island pictures had made him famous. Although they had endeavored to keep it private, the story of the beautiful Lady Eleanor Collinwood as connected with them was whispered from circle to circle, and contributed undoubtedly to their popularity. Orders from the highest sources poured in upon him. Then it was he responded to Admiral Lord Collinwood's earnest invitation, and presented himself at Collinwood House. The admiral was fortunately in London, and received him with the same friendly warmth he had shown on their first meeting. Lady Annabel, too, was exceedingly kind and courteous, but Walter was instantly aware of an antagonistic feeling, despite her gentle expressions of gratitude. She alluded quietly to his own refusal to meet them before, and acknowledged that it had grieved her daughter.

When their conversation first began to flag, Lady Annabel arose with her inimitable grace of manner and said:

"Now, my dear admiral, if you please you shall come to the library and have a quiet little chat with me, while I send for Lady Eleanor to come down to the drawing-room. She is not yet aware of Mr. Vernon's presence. It is natural they should wish their first meeting to be without witnesses."

He smiled in cheerful acquiescence.

"A good idea and very thoughtful in you to remember it, Lady Annabel!"

Five minutes Walter was left alone. He needed thrice the time to calm his heart; then he heard a light, quick step without, and the door opened for a graceful figure robed in sea-blue satin and sparkling with jewels. Both fair white hands were outstretched, and she said eagerly:

"Cruel, cruel Walter, why have you delayed so long?"

Then she paused abruptly. The tall, handsome man, with his glossy whiskers and foreign moustache—was that Walter?

The smile that broke over his face reassured her.

"Ah, it is certainly you—I was almost afraid. Oh, Walter, are you half as glad as I to meet again after this long interval? Foolish Walter—as proud as ever, are you not? I meant to scold, that you should wait till the honors were so thick about you, but I am too happy now; and your father—he is not with you?"

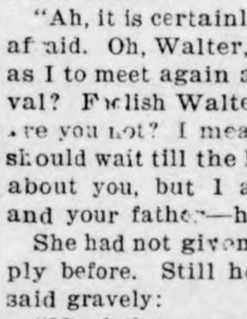
She had not given him a chance to reply before. Still holding her hand, he said gravely:

"My father never reached the land, Lady Eleanor—his prophecy was fulfilled."

Her ready tears showed how completely she had kept her old nature. Walter had meant to be very dignified and reserved; but with her genial, old time manner, it was impossible; and when they parted—although no word of love had been hinted—they were Walter and Ellie, as in days gone by.

If Lady Annabel's face showed sign of uneasiness at Eleanor's affectionate good-bye and earnest entreaty that he should come often, there was no sign of it in the courteous words with which she echoed her daughter's invitation.

CHAPTER XII.



HENCEFORWARD Walter mingled freely in the best and noblest society. He worked hard at his easel, but took time enough to accept such invitations to festitivities, dinners and parties, as he felt sure would give him opportunity to meet the Collinwoods. With Lady Annabel he was always reserved, even to formality. He could not pierce the imperceptible but icy veil that seemed ever hanging between them; and when one day he heard the Duke of B—— saying pettishly to the admiral, who had in some gay way alluded to his devotion:

"Don't jest, I beg of you! Lady Annabel is peerlessly lovely, but I wish she had a little of mortal frailty. She is so cold, I am quite in despair!" Walter could hardly sympathize with him; and yet he had seen her strangely moved from her accustomed stately dignity.

Once, when in company, allusion was made to her husband's elder brother—the first Lord Colinwood—who was killed by a fall, over a precipice while on a shooting expedition. The admiral was relating the particulars to a friend, and Walter, happening to glance at the Lady Annabel, beheld her pale and trembling, leaning against a pillar for support. He sprang to her assistance, when she faltered, in a voice whose sharp misery haunted him through the day:

"It is nothing; I am subject to fainting attacks. Don't be alarmed, but let me get out quietly."

He assisted her to the carriage without attracting attention, and was ready to quiet Eleanor's alarm when she first noticed her mother's absence.

There was one little incident to mark the day. As he loitered by Eleanor's side he drew from her bouquet a spray of jasmine.

"Ah, Lady Eleanor," said he, "do you remember how these milky stars trailed their splendor over the rocks in our old home?"

She smiled—then sighed.

"I have forgotten nothing—not the most trival circumstance."

"Then," said he, touching lightly a diamond suspended from his watch-chain, "you have not forgotten this, nor the more precious words that accompanied it."

The blue eyes fell beneath his passionate glance—a soft rose blushed over her cheek, and the sweet lips faltered as she answered—

"Yes, I remember."

"And you will not gainsay the promise?" pursued he.

"Is that a fair question, Walter?" asked she, archly, rising hastily to cross the room to speak with her uncle.

Walter's heart bounded.

"What more can I desire?" thought he. "To-morrow I will make my formal proposal both to the admiral and Lady Annabel."

But when the next day came, and eager and joyous he sought Collinwood House, he found a strange change in Eleanor. She was pale and nervous with a constraint and formality that would have grieved him deeply had it not been evidently forced and unnatural. When he made known his errand he was still more astonished and grieved. Her cheek alternately flushed and paled; she half rose, as if to fly from his presence, and then sinking back into her chair, faltered:

"O Walter, don't, don't! It is heart-rending for me to hear there is no hope!"

"No hope!" repeated Walter, blankly. "Surely, after your words yesterday you cannot accuse me of presumption."

She had buried her face in her hands.

"No, no—not that! O, what can I say in explanation?"

She sat for a few moments in perplexed distress, and then calming herself, continued more coherently:

"It is best you should hear the truth, Walter. Had your proposal come yesterday, I should have been the happiest girl in England; to-day it only adds to my misery, for by my own voluntary promise I am betrothed to another."

"Another!" exclaimed Walter, springing to his feet. "What can I understand by this, Lady Eleanor?"

"Do not try to understand it," answered she sadly, "only be sure to realize the actual truth of the circumstance."

He was pacing to and fro in uncontrolled agitation.

Eleanor made no attempt to soothe him, but sat like one stricken dumb through some terrible calamity. Suddenly Lady Annabel's sweet voice was heard without the door. As if in utter terror, Lady Eleanor dashed her handkerchief across her eyes to remove all traces of tears, and whispered hurriedly:

"It is my mother! Walter! Walter, if you love me, do not let her suspect how unhappy I am—how much it grieves me to give you up!"

"To give me up? Ah," retorted Walter, bitterly. "I thought as much; it is Lady Annabel's doings—she never liked me."

"You ar wrong, Walter—you are unjust to her! Ah, if you could know—if you could hear as I did last night! Walter, Walter, help me bear my fate bravely—perform my duty faithfully!"

He was looking dismally at her entreating, agonized face.

Harshness.

The crying fault of our generation is its lack of gentleness. Our age is harsh when it judges, brutal when it blames, and savage in its severity.—Rev. Dr. Hillis.

INDICATES TROUBLE.

The Sultan Pays No Attention to the Powers.

Constantinople dispatch: Everything points to very serious trouble throughout the Turkish empire. The ball was set rolling when the sultan signed decrees levying additional taxes to raise funds for military purposes. As a result the powers sent a collective note in the strongest language calling attention to the danger of arming the Mussulmans and pointing out the critical situation of the affairs of the empire. But large purchases of arms have already been made. The danger increases hourly. The porte sent an evasive reply to the note of the powers, saying it was only intended to complete the armament of the army reserves and strengthen the other land forces. The armament of the reserve indicates that the empire is facing a situation which may necessitate the calling forth of all the military forces at its disposal. There is always in view the probability that the sultan, seeing the powers are really in earnest, is by these armaments threatening a wholesale massacre of Christians and will announce that Turkey will resist to the utmost any attempt at armed coercion.

SERIOUS SITUATION.

Diplomats at Constantinople Are Again Disposing of the Sultan.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—The Constantinople correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that the situation in that city is causing the gravest anxiety in diplomatic circles, which are again discussing the question of the deposition of the sultan. The sheik-ul-Islam, the head of the Mohammedan faith, through whom alone can the sultan be legally deposed, remains at the Yildiz kiosk, the sultan's residence, nominally as a guest of his majesty, but really as a prisoner.

The Apple Crop.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—Throughout the states of the chief commercial production, including New England and New York, the crop of winter apples is large, according to the report in the England Homestead, which places the aggregate yield at a shade under 59,500,000 barrels for all the United States, against 60,000,000 in 1895. This authority says the crop in New England, New York, Michigan and parts of a few other states is phenomenal. The report covering the central west, however, shows that in many instances the crop is insufficient to supply home requirements. Exports from the Atlantic coast are already 1,000,000 barrels, a third more than for all of last season.

Chinese Atrocities.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The state department has received the report of the Ku Cheng commission, consisting of Consul Hixson, at Fu Chu, China, and Commander Newell, which investigated the attack made upon American and other missionaries in Kutien, China, August 1, 1895. The report is copiously illustrated with photographs. The incident to which it relates was long ago closed by the execution of the ringleaders in the attack.

Accidentally Shot Her Husband.

VANDALIA, Ill., Nov. 1.—Near Hagerstown, Edward Armstrong, accompanied by his wife, who is a good marksman, went hunting for quail. Mrs. Armstrong was in a corn field and could not see her husband, who was on the other side of the fence. She fired at a covey of birds, the charge striking her husband in the back of the head, killing him almost instantly.

Mannow Confessed too Late.

CHIKAGO, Oct. 30.—Julius Mannow, who was hanged to-day for the murder of Carey B. Birch, in June 1895, wrote a confession, in which he exonerates his companion, Joseph Windrath, from participation in the crime. Windrath, however, will not be saved by the confession, as he was hanged last June on Mannow's testimony.

Executions in Madagascar.

PARIS, Oct. 31.—An official dispatch from Antananarivo, capital of the island of Madagascar, announces that the minister of the interior, Rainaudrianaupaudry, and Prince Ratismananga have been executed at Antananarivo for complicity in the recent rebellion and the Premier Rainitsinbosify has resigned.

A Key West dispatch says: Well informed passengers from Havana confirm the advices received by mail that Maceo crossed the trocha and joined the other insurgent forces in Havana province. They declare that the report circulated by Maceo of his encampment at Cacara Jacara and the calculated attack on that town was merely a feint of the rebel leader to concentrate the Spanish forces at that point. That the ruse was successful is proved by the fact that General Munox, with a large force, was sent in that direction to attack Maceo but upon arrival at Cacara Jacara the Spaniards found nothing but a deserted camp. In the meantime Maceo attacked the trocha at Artemisa, leveled the town and crossed into Havana province.

Rev. P. J. Berg, pastor of the Swedish M. E. church, Des Moines, Iowa, on March 4, 1896, writes: Last year I was troubled with a bad cough for about five months. I got medicine from my family physician and I tried other remedies without relief. When I first saw Dr. Kay's Lung Balm advertised I thought I would try it and I am glad I did. I bought a box and took a tablet now and then without any regularity, and after a few days to my great surprise the cough was gone. Ten days ago I had a sore throat. I was out of the tablets and could not get them in Des Moines, and I sent to the western office of Dr. B. J. Kay Medical Co., Omaha, Neb., for six boxes and as soon as I took it a few times that soreness and hoarseness all passed away in one night. I believe it is also good for sore throat." Dr. Kay's Lung Balm does not cause sickness at the stomach like many remedies, and is more effectual than any other we know of. Sold by druggists at 25 cts., or sent by mail.

THE CASE OF

ANTON WENZL

When Anton Wenzl settled in Pawnee County, Neb., in 1867, he was compelled to work out by the month to support his family. To-day he owns 1,640 acres of the finest farm land, valued at $30 per acre, together with stock and other property valued at $10,000. Every dollar of it was made on the farm. Mr. Wenzl is one of seven brothers whose aggregate land holding amounts to over 5,000 acres.

IN OUR

NEBRASKA BOOK

are dozens of statements like that of Mr. Wenzl. They are made by farmers who have made a success of farming. They show that Nebraska is as good a State as any in the Union.

The book in which they appear is as different from the ordinary agricultural pamphlet as day is from night. It is interesting, practical, truthful. In a straightforward, simple fashion, it tells you everything you need to know about Nebraska — its climate, people, schools, churches, railroads, markets, soil and crops. It explains why the Nebraska farmer makes money in spite of low prices and hard times. Why land is cheap—and how it is as easy for an intelligent and industrious man to buy a Nebraska farm as it is to rent one in any State east of the Missouri River.

Every farm renter who wants to become a farm-owner; every farm-owner who is tired of trying to make money off high-priced land; every father who wants to give his sons a start on the high road to independence, should write for a copy. Free.

He was a wise man who was grateful there were so many things he could do without. "Godliness with contentment is great gain."

Many people are in the habit of saying: "While I have great respect for you, I have none for your opinions". We can have respect for another mans children without adopting them. Can we not have respect for a friends opinions without adopting them? Why cannot the head be as generous as the heart.

Some men do not fancy the idea of having been evolved from monkeys. As yet we are ignorant of how the monkeys feel about it. We have never heard of a monkey becoming a man but we have seen men descend to monkeys. One would infer from this, that while monkeys do not believe in evolution, men do believe in devolution.

Mr. Johnson says he is satisfied that the timely use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, during a severe attack, saved his little boy's life. He is in the drug business, a member of the firm Johnson Bros, of that place: and they handle a great many patent medicines for throat and lung diseases. He had all these to chose from, and skilled physicians ready to respond to his call, but selected this remedy for use in his own family at a time when his child's life was in danger, becanse he new it to be superior to any other, and famous the country over for its cures of croup. H. L. Pickering handed us a head of cotton that equals any in quality and size grown in the South. It was grown this summer on his farm south of town. by his son Elmer, and he has a fine row of it. This demonstrates the equality of Iowa soil to that found in any section of the country being adapted to raising most anything that grows. We can now say Iowa is a cotton state. The sampel can be seen at this office for a few days.—Eagle Grove Eagle.

One of the most successfull apple growers in Cerro Gordo county is P. Calkins, of Clear Lake. He has eight acres set out in appel trees, of about twenty varieties, among the leaders being the Hass, Snow, Dutchess, and Wealthy. This year he raised his largest crop, 2 000 bushels, and they are as fine apples as ever fell from a tree, He has disposed of them at an average af 45 cents per bushel, making a grand total of $900 realized. Talk about not being able to raise adples in this climate! This showing should put an everlasting quietus on this kind of senseless jargon.—Times Herald.

Theodore Aldahl, son of Knut Aldahl, living north of town, had a serious accident happen to him last Friday. He was carrying a gun on a riding plow, when one of the horses kicked, striking the hammer of the gun and discharging it. The load tore a large hole in his forearm, chest and shoulder, causing a frightful wound. Dr. Keeler was hastily summoned and has the lad who is but fourteen years of age, on a fair road to recovery.—Lake Mills Graphic.

Further good fortune appears to be in store for the American farmer in a prospective great advance in the price of potatoes, owing to a disastrous prevalance of England, Scotland, Wales and (to a smaller extent) in those of Irteand. Immence exports of the tubers will probably be required from America to make up the shortage; and our farmers may well smile as they look at the product of their own fields this year.—Armstrong Journal,

If once in a while slightly sour milk must be fed to young calves, add to it a pinch of saleratus.

Stop up the knot holes in the barn, batten the cracks and make things snug for the cold weather that is almost here.

Mr. Harvey Johnson' a successful dairyman of Harrison County, Iowa. estimates that separator skim-milk if fed while it retains its natural warmth has a feeding value of four cents per gallon.

Cows in milk need much more water than dry cows or steers; they need it in their milk factory; milk is more three-fourths water See that they get all the water they want to drink and as often as they want it.

Take care of the calves this fall and winter. They will be worth good money. When good times come and laboring people get to work in the cities we will find that there is a great shortage of beef cattle.

The churn should always be stopped when butter is in the granular condition. If buttea is permitted to gather in chunhs it is possible to thoroughly remove the butter-milh and the butter will neither taste as good nor heep as well; in addition to this, over churning injures the grain.

The dairyman who has built up a steady demand for his butter must work just about as hard to keep that demand in a healthy condition as he did in the first place. If by some misfortune a batch of butter is inferior to that usually made, it should never be sent to a regular customer. Sell it on the marhet without calling attention to the name of the person who made it. Let it bring what it is worth.

Last Saturday evening, Oct. 24th,. Mr. Ed Felkey's little girl Bessie, was playing about Mr. Frank Ellis's blacksmith shop when by accident her left hand was caught in the horse power, crushing and lacerating the forefinger so badly that it was necessary to have it removed. Drs. Gannon and McDonald were called and amputated the entire finger. The operation was borne with heroic bravery and Bessie is doing nicely.—Armstrong Journal.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"CHANT TO THE STARS," SUNDAY'S SUBJECT.

From the Text: "Who Laid the Corner Stone Thereof, When the Morning Stars Sang Together"—Book of Job Chap. 38, Verses 6 and 7.

WE have all seen the ceremony at the lay-of the corner-stone of church, asylum, or Masonic temple. Into the hollow of the stone were placed scrolls of history and important documents, to be suggestive if, one or two hundred years after, the building should be destroyed by fire or torn down. We remember the silver trowel or iron hammer that smote the square piece of granite into sanctity. We remember some venerable man who presided wielding the trowel or hammer. We remember also the music as the choir stood on the scattered stones and timber of the building about to be constructed. The leaves of the note-books fluttered in the wind, and were turned over with a great rustling, and we remember how the bass, baritone, tenor, contralto, and soprana voices commingled. They had for many days been rehearsing the special programme, that it might be worthy of the corner-stone laying.

In my text the poet of Uz calls us to a grander ceremony—the laying of the foundation of this great temple of a world. The corner-stone was a block of light and the trowel was of celestial crystal. All about and on the embankments of clouds stood the angelic choristers unrolling their librettos of overture, and other worlds clapped shining cymbals while the ceremony went on, and God the architect, by stroke of light after stroke of light, dedicated this great cathedral of a world, with mountains for pillars, and sky for frescoed ceiling, and flowering fields for a floor, and sunrise and midnight aurora for upholstery. "Who laid the corner-stone thereof, when the morning stars sang together?"

The fact is that the whole universe was a complete cadence, an unbroken dithyramb, a musical portfolio. The great sheet of immensity had been spread out, and written on it were the stars, the smaller of them minims, the larger of them sustained notes. The meteors marked the staccato passages, the whole heavens a gamut with all sounds, intonations, modulations, the space between the worlds a musical interval, trembling of stellar light a quaver, the thunder a bass clef, the wind among trees a treble clef. That is the way God made all things a perfect harmony.

The human intellect out of tune: the judgment wrongly swerved or the memory leaky or the will weak or the temper inflammable, the well-balanced mind exceptional.

Domestic life out of tune: only here and there a conjugal outbreak of incompatibility of temper through the divorce courts, or a filial outbreak about a father's will through the surrogate's court, or a case of wife-beating or husband-poisoning through the criminal courts, but thousands of families with June outside and January within.

Society out of tune: labor and capital, their hands on each other's throat. Spirit of caste keeping those down in the social scale who are struggling to get up, and putting those who are up in anxiety lest they have to come down. No wonder the old pianoforte of society is all out of tune, when hypocrisy and lying, and subterfuge, and double-dealing, and sycophancy, and charlatanism and revenge, have for six thousand years been banging away at the keys and stamping the pedals.

On all sides there is a shipwreck of harmonies. Nations in discord without realizing it; so wrong is the feeling of nation for nation that symbols chosen are fierce and destructive. In this country, where our skies are full of robins and doves and morning larks, we have our national symbol the fierce and filthy eagle, as cruel a bird as can be found in all the ornithological catalogues. In Great Britain, where they have lambs and fallow deer, their symbol is the merciless lion. In Russia, where from between her frozen north and blooming south all kindly beasts dwell, they chose the growling bear; and in the world's heraldry a favorite figure is the dragon, the fabled winged serpent, ferocious and dreadful. And so fond is the world of contention that we climb out through the heavens and baptize one of the other planets with the spirit of battle and call it Mars, after the god of war, and we give to the eighth sign of the zodiac the name of the scorpion, a creature which is chiefly celebrated for its deadly sting. But, after all, these symbols are expressive of the way nation feels toward nation. Discord wide as the continent and bridging the seas.

Tartini, the great musical composer, dreamed one night that he made a contract with Satan, the latter to be ever in the composer's service. But one night he handed to Satan a violin, on which Diabolus played such sweet music that the composer was awakened by the emotion, and tried to reproduce the sounds, and therefrom was written Tartini's most famous piece, "The Devil's Sonata," a dream ingenious, but faulty, for all melody descends from heaven, and only discords ascend from hell. All hatreds, feuds, controversies, backbitings, and revenges are the devil's sonata, are diabolic fugue, are demoniac phantasy, are grand march of doom, are allegro of perdition.

But the worst of all discord is moral discord. If society and the world are painfully discordant to imperfect man what must they be to a perfect God! People try to define what sin is. It seems to me that sin is getting out of harmony with God, a disagreement with his holiness, with his purity, with his love, with his commands, our will clashing with his will, the finite dashing against the infinite, the frail against the puissant, the created against the Creator. If a thousand musicians, with flute and cornet-a-piston, and trumpet, and violoncello, the hautboy, and trombone, and all the wind and stringed instruments that ever gathered in a Duseldorf jubilee should resolve that they would play out of tune, and put concord to the rack, and make the place wild with shrieking and grating and rasping sounds, they could not make such a pandemonium as that which rages in a sinful soul when God listens to the play of its thoughts, passions, and emotion—discord, lifelong discord, maddening discord.

In olden the choristers had a tuning fork with two prongs, and they would strike it on the back of pew or music rack, and put it to the ear, and then start the tune, and all the other voices would join. In modern orchestra the leader has a complete instrument rightly attuned, and he sounds that, and all the other performers tune the keys of their instruments to make them correspond, and draw the bow over the string and listen, and sound it over again, until all the keys are screwed to concert pitch, and the discords melt into one great symphony, and the curtain hoists, and the baton taps, and audiences are raptured with Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," or Rossini's "Stabat Mater," or Bach's "Magnificat" in D.

Now, our world can never be attuned by an imperfect instrument. Even a Cremona would not do. Heaven has ordained the only instrument, and it is made out of the wood of the cross, and the voices that accompany it are imported voices, cantatrices of the first Christmas night, when heaven serenaded the earth with "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Lest we start too far off and get lost in generalities, we had better begin with curselves, get our own hearts and lives in harmony with the eternal Christ. Oh, for his Almighty Spirit to attune us, to chord our will with his will, to modulate our life with his life, and bring us into unison with all that is pure, and self-sacrificing, and heavenly! The strings our nature are all broken and twisted, and the bow is so slack it cannot evoke anything mellifluous. The instrument made for heaven to play on has been roughly twanged and struck by influences worldly and demoniac. O master hand of Christ, restore this split, and fractured, and despoiled, and unstrung nature, until first it shall wail out for our sin and then thrill with Divine pardon!

The whole world must also be attuned by the same power. I was in the Fairbanks Weighing Scale Manufactory, of Vermont. Six hundred hands, and they have never had a strike. Complete harmony between labor and capital, the operatives of scores of years in their beautiful homes near by the mansions of the manufacturers, whose invention and Christian behavior made the great enterprise: So, all the world over, labor and capital will be brought into euphony. You may have heard what is called the "Anvil Chorus," composed by Verdi, a tune played by hammers, great and small, now with mighty stroke, and now with heavy stroke, beating a great iron anvil. That is what the world has got to come to—anvil chorus, yardstick chorus, shuttle chorus, trowel chorus, crowbar chorus, pickaxe chorus, gold-mine chorus, rail-track chorus, locomotive chorus. It can be done, and it will be done. So all social life will be attuned by Gospel harp. There will be as many classes in society as now, but the classes will not be regulated by birth, nor wealth, nor accident, but by the scale of virtue and benevolence, and people will be assigned to their places as good, or very good, or most excellent. So, also, commercial life will be attuned, and there will be twelve in every dozen, and sixteen ounces in every pound, and apples at the bottom of the barrel will be as sound as those on the top, and silk goods will not be cotton, and sellers will not have to charge honest people more than the right price because others will not pay, and goods will come to you corresponding with the sample by which you purchased them, and coffee will not be chicoried, and sugar will not be sanded, and milk will not be chalked, and adulteration of food will be a State prison offense. Aye, all things shall be attuned. Elections in England and the United States will no more be a grand carnival of defamation and scurrility, but the elevation of righteous men in a righteous way.

Heaven is to have a new song, an entirely new song, but I would not wonder if, as sometimes on earth a tune is fashioned out of many tunes, or it is one tune with the variations, so some of the songs of the redeemed may have playing through them the songs of earth; and how thrilling, as coming through the great anthem of the saved, accompanied by harpers with their harps, and trumpeters with their trumpets, if we should hear some of the strains of Antioch, and Mount Pisgah, and Coronation, and Lenox, and St. Martin's, and Fountain, and Ariel, and Old Hundred! How they would bring to mind the praying circles and communion days and the Christmas festivals, and the church worship in which on earth we mingled! I have no idea that when we bid farewell to earth we are to bid farewell to all these grand old Gospel hymns, which melted and raptured our souls for so many years. Now, if sin is discord, and righteousness is harmony, let us get out of the one and enter the other. After our dreadful civil war was over, in the summer of 1869,, a great national peace jubilee was held in Boston, and as an elder of my church had been honored by the selection of some of his music, to be rendered on that occasion, I accompanied him to the jubilee. Forty thousand people sat and stood in the great Coliseum erected for that purpose. Thousands of wind and stringed instruments. Twelve thousand trained voices. The masterpieces of all ages rendered, hour after hour, and day after day—Handel's "Judas Maccabaeus," Sphor's "Last Judgment," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Hadyn's "Creation," "Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Meyerbeer's "Coronation March," rolling on and up in surges that billowed against the heavens. The mighty cadences within were accompanied on the outside by the ringing of bells of the city and cannon on the commons, discharged by electricity, in exact time with the music, thundering their awful bars of a harmony that astounded all nations. Sometimes I bowed my head and wept. Sometimes I stood up in the enchantment, and sometimes the effect was so overpowering I felt I could not endure it, especially when all the voices were in full chorus, and all the batons were in full wave, and all the orchestra in full triumph, and a hundred anvils under mighty hammers were in full clang, and all the towers of the city rolled in their majestic sweetness, and the whole building quaked with the boom of thirty cannon. Parepa Rosa, with a voice that will never again be equalled on earth until the archangelic voice so proclaims that time shall be no longer, rose above all other sounds in her rendering of our national air, "The Star Spangled Banner." It was too much for a mortal, quite enough for an immortal, to hear, and, while some fainted, one woman's spirit, released under its power, sped away to be with God.

O Lord, our God, quickly usher in the whole world's peace jubilee, and all islands of the sea join the five continents, and all the voices and all the musical instruments of all nations combine, and all the organs that ever sounded requiem of sorrow sound only a grand march of joy, and all the bells that tolled for burial ring for resurrection, and all the cannon that ever hurled death across the nations sound forth eternal victory, and over all the acclaim of earth and minstresy of heaven there will be heard one voice sweeter and mightier than any human or angelic voice, a voice once full of tears, but now full triumph, the voice of Christ, saying, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and last." Then, at the laying of the top-stone of the world's history, the same voices shall be heard as when, at the laying of the world's cornerstone, "the morning stars sang together."

Staying Away from Church.

The habit of absenting one's self from the Sunday services of the church is one very easily made. Sometimes it is occasioned by sickness; very often some small excuse, some grudge against a member, some resentment at a fellow member's fault, is the occasion. Jesus will be there, even if an unworthy member is present. Jesus may be present, especially to meet and forgive that unworthy member; and who are we that we should judge a brother or a sister? We must be careful not to repeat Thomas' error, or we may also—we almost certainly will also—repeat his unbelief. If we do not, like Thomas, come back again to the place where Jesus meets His disciples, how can we expect to meet Him? At least let no one be so jealous for the honor of Christ and His church that he shall dishonor both by avoiding them.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

BattleAx PLUG

What a chewer wants first is a good tobacco; then he thinks about the size of the plug. He finds both goodness and bigness in "Battle Ax." He finds a 5 cent piece almost as large as a 10 cent piece of other high grade brands. No wonder millions chew "Battle Ax."

A REMARKABLE CASE.

ILL SINCE GIRLHOOD, NOW A PICTURE OF HEALTH.

From the Star, Valparaiso, Ind.

The attention of the Star having been called to several cases of radical cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, it was determined to investigate some of the more notable of these cases, with a view to disseminating exact information on the subject and benefiting others who were suffering. Prominent among those who had experienced benefits from the use of this remedy was mentioned Mrs. Mary Noren, wife of John Noren, a prosperous farmer living northeast of Valparaiso, Ind., and to her a reporter was accordingly dispatched.

Mrs. Noren was found busily engaged in household duties, but she found time to detail her experience, and was willing and even anxious that the benefits she had felt should be told for the benefit of those who had suffered as she did.

"I had been ill since girlhood with a complication of complaints," said Mrs. Noren, never so much as to be confined long in bed, but I suffered intense misery. My chief trouble was with my stomach. I felt a constant gnawing pain that was at times almost distracting, and which had been diagnosed by different physicians as dyspepsia and sympathetic derangement dependent on the conditions of the generative organs. I had pains in the back, sometimes so great as to make me unable to work, and frequent bilious attacks. I also suffered greatly from constipation, from which I never could find permanent relief. Then these symptoms were aggravated by rheumatic pains between the shoulder blades, which were most excruciating in damp or cold weather. After my marriage about five years ago, and when my baby was born the trouble seemed to increase, and I was frequently so sick that I could not do my household work. I tried different physicians and used numerous remedies, but all in vain, until one day last fall I happened to read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. My husband got three boxes from Mr. C. D. Rushton, the druggist, and I began to use them. From the first I began to feel relief, and before the three boxes were gone I was nearly well. The constipation was cured and the other troubles were so much relieved that I felt better than I had felt for years. As I continued in the use of the pills I grew better and strong, my appetite was more natural, and my flesh increased, until I am in the condition you see me now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Imps.

Not Altogether Hopeless.

"I shall never marry," declared Miss Elderly in a tone meant to be firm.

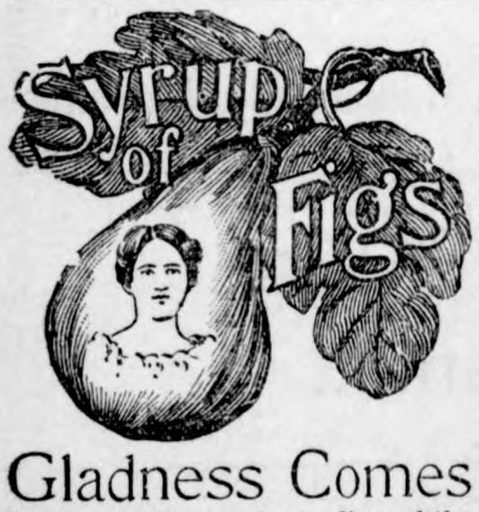
"Don't say that," answered her best friend, Florence. "Women older than you have had proposals."

A Wise Son.

Mrs. Lawnes—Have you noticed that Thomas isn't detained at the office as often as he used to be?

Mr. Lawnes—Yes, he usually gets home earlier after the lawn mower is packed away for the season.

Upwards of 4,000 corpses were creamated in France during 1895.



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

NEW CABLE CODE.

An Official Vocabulary of Preconcerted Language to Be Issued.

At the international telegraph conference which was held at Buda-Pesth in July it was decided to issue a new official vocabulary of preconcerted language. This was opposed by American firms who operate private codes as the value of these codes would be destroyed. The conference adopted an amendment to its constitution, in order to provide for these codes, and it has just been issued from headquarters at Berne, Switzerland. Preconcerted language is defined as composed of words having intrinsic sense, but not combined into intelligible phrases. Words in this language cannot contain over ten characters according to the Morse alphabet. They must be taken from one or more of these languages: German, English, Spanish, French, Dutch, Italian, Portuguese and Latin. Proper names cannot be used except with their meaning in plain language. The original sending office can demand the production of the sender's code to see that the rules have been observed. From a date to be fixed by a future conference all the words used in private telegrams written in preconcerted language will be extracted from the official vocabulary duly enlarged and compiled by the International Bureau of Telegraph Administrations. The new vocabulary will include all words of private codes, provided they are true unmutilated words, taken from the eight languages given above and comply with the above rules. The international bureau desires all compilers of codes and all persons desiring words from certain codes reproduced in the official vocabulary, to forward them before the end of this year to the International Bureau of Telegraph Administrations, Berne, Switzerland.

A CASE OF TELEPATHY.

A gentleman took a house in Ireland for six months and was accompanied thither by his wife and daughters. The house was furnished and had plenty of bedrooms. Therefore it was decided not to use a certain large, long room with cupboards along one side (which had all been locked and sealed up with tape) in which things belonging to the owners of the house had been put away. One evening one of the daughters, going to her room, saw an old lady wrapped in a shawl walking along the passage in front of her. The old lady appeared to know her way and hurried on without hesitation into the unused room. The girl called her sister and they followed the dame into the room. But all was silent; no one was there; the dust lying about showed no signs of footprints. Shortly after the same young lady was reading on the hearthrug by firelight. Looking up she beheld the old lady standing in the doorway watching her. Greatly frightened, she sprang up and, rushing downstairs, was found fainting at the drawing-room door. At last the family returned to Dublin. One day when a friend was calling the curious incident which I have narrated was referred to. The young lady very unwillingly told her experiences. The visitor seemed much struck and asked for an accurate description of the old lady. "For," said she, "that house belonged to two old ladies, sisters, and when they let their house they went to reside at Geneva. One of them, answering exactly to the description you have given, died at the time you saw her appear."—Realm.

Chinamen Buying Wives.

The Chinamen of Australia, when they take a notion to marry, write to a matrimonial agent in Hong Kong somewhat as follows: "I want a wife. She must be a maiden under 20 years of age, and must not have left her father's house. She must also have never read a book, and her eye lashes must be half an inch in length. Her teeth must be as sparkling as the pearls of Ceylon, her breath must be like unto the scents of the magnificent odorous groves of Java, and her attire must be from the silken weavers of Ka-la-Ching, which are on the banks of the greatest river in the world—the overflowing Yang-tse-Kiang."

The price of a Chinese woman delivered in Sydney is $190, but two Chinese women only cost $260; therefore, the Chinese import the women in couples. The importer never sees the women before they arrive, and then he generally selects the best one. The other is shown round to a number of well-to-do Chinese, and after they have inspected her she is submitted to what may be called public auction.

Arabia's Laughing Plant.

The laughing plant of Arabia produces small bean-like seeds, small doses of which, when dried and powdered, intoxicate like laughing gas. The person indulging in the drug dances, laughs and shouts like a madman for about an hour, when he becomes exhausted and falls into a death-like sleep, which often lasts several hours.

WOMEN WANT TO KNOW.

To Whom Can They Tell Their Troubles?

A Woman Answers "To Me"—Anxious Inquirers Intelligently Answered—Thousands of Grateful Letters.

Women regard it as a blessing that they can talk to a woman who fully understands their every ailment, and thus avoid the examinations, experiments and theories of incompetent physicians, whose sex deprives them of knowing by experience. The endless confidence placed in Mrs. Pinkham by American women, prompts them to seek her advice constantly.

Female diseases yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once. Inflammation, ulceration, falling and displacement of the womb, ovarian troubles, spinal weakness and kidney complaints, all have their symptoms, and should be "nipped in the bud." Bearing-down pains, backache, headache, nervousness, pains in groins, lassitude, whites, irregularities, dread of impending evil, blues, sleeplessness, faintness, etc.

Here is testimony right to the point:

"The doctors told me that unless I went to the hospital and had an operation performed, I could not live. I had falling, enlargement and ulceration of the womb.

"I was in constant misery all the time; my back ached; I was always tired. It was impossible for me to walk far or stand long at a time. I was surely a wreck. I decided that I would give your Compound and Sanative Wash a trial.

"I took three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used two packages of Sanative Wash, and I am now almost well. I am stouter and healthier than I have ever been in my life. My friends and neighbors and the doctors are surprised at my rapid improvement. I have told them all what I have been taking."—Mrs. Annetta Bickmeier, Bellaire, Belmont Co., O.

He (pleadingly)—Why can't we be married right away?

ALL OVER THE WORLD

SITUATION IN CUBA.

Maceo Has Not Yet Crossed the Spanish Trocha.

KEY WEST, Fla., Nov. 7.—Advices from Cuba give plainer descriptions of the movements of the insurgents than can be sent by cable. Antonio Maceo has moved to the plain country on the south coast of Pinar del Rio, with the intention of making an attempt to pass the trocha, protected in the meantime, as he hopes, by the insurgents at the rear of the trocha. He at present is supposed to be at Carajala in the direction of the swamp of Majalas. It is thought probable that it will be difficult to pass by the south coast to the western portion of Pinar del Rio because General Weyler has stationed 2,000 cavalry to prevent that movement near Candelaria. Captain General Weyler's columns are fortifying the strategic positions taken from the insurgents in the mountains of Pinar del Rio so as to form a strong base of operations. When once these are finished General Weyler calculates that he will be able to dispose of 10,000 more men in the pursuit of Maceo and the general opinion is that he will be able to give him a decisive blow.

THIRTEEN DROWNED.

Collision of Steamers Off Nova Scotia Coast.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Nov. 8.—A marine tragedy occurred here. The schooner Maggie, Captain Wm. Blundon, while entering this harbor with twenty-three persons aboard, was struck by the steamer Tiber, Captain John DeLisle, which was steaming outward at full speed. The schooner sank from the force of the collision, carrying down with it thirteen persons. Four of these were women, one the wife of the captain and another his sister. A young married couple named Power, and a brother and sister of the name of Holloway, are of those drowned. The passengers were coming to St. Johns to procure their supplies for the winter before navigation closed. Those who escaped were kept afloat by the aid of planks from the schooner's decks and were picked up by the steamer's boat and brought back to the port by the pilot boat which had the Tiber in tow. The latter continued on her voyage.

M'KINLEY'S CONGRESS.

It Will Have a Majority of Republicans in It.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6.—The republican congressional committee has reports showing 201 congressional districts are safely republican. At the democratic headquarters it is claimed unofficially that the republican majority in the next house will not be more than fourteen. The populists claim 150 silver men and twenty populists. The indications are that the senate will be opposed to the free coinage of silver, but Senator Faulkner says the democrats, populists and silver republicans will control that body. The Associated Press believes the house will stand 201 republicans, 124 democrats and 19 populists.

CHICAGO BUTCHERS STRIKE.

They Were Promised a Raise of Wages Which Does Not Materialize.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—All the pork butchers at the packing houses in Chicago are on a strike, caused by the failure to advance their wages, as is customary sor the winter season. During the summer wages were $1 a day less than in winter, the change taking place usually in October. On the plea of hard times and the approaching election, the date of change was postponed until November 4. The men were notified that only 75 cents additional would be allowed, and they struck.

WILL GIVE SULTAN TIME.

Armenian Committees in Europe Postpone Aggressive Action.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 6.—The Armenian committee of London, Paris and Geneva have decided to stop all further action of their propaganda in order to give time for the application of the promised reforms. The new patriarch will be legally elected in about a week.

Murdered Three.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Nov. 7.—J. H. Clark, detective and deputy sheriff, accompanied by Dan Christian, arrived here at day break with Captain Hatfield and his fourteen-year-old son, who were captured in the mountains of Mingo county. Hatfield is of Hatfield-McCoy notoriety, and killed three men in a dispute on election.

Succeeds General Blank.

MADRID, Nov. 7.—General Camilo Polaveija, who at one time was upon the point of starting for Cuba to succeed General Martinez de Campos as captain general of that island, has started for the Philippine islands to replace General Blank as captain general of those colonies.

CASCADES CANAL.

The Columbia River Waterway Opened to Navigation.

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 6.—The canal and locks of the cascades of the Columbia, which have been under construction for some sixteen years and represent to date an expenditure of government moneys exceeding three million dollars, have been thrown open for the passage of boats. For several months to come, however, navigation will be permitted only during daylight, in order that there may be no interference with that portion of the work which is still uncompleted.

GEN. LEE RETURNS.

Refuses to Tell What He Knows About Cuba.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—General Fitzhugh Lee, accompanied by his private secretary, arrived from Havana on the Ward line steamer Vigilancia. General Lee, in an interview, said his health had been excellent from the time he left this country last June, in spite of the reports to the contrary. His stay in Cuba had been pleasant, although the duties of his position were exceedingly onerous. General Lee declined to talk about the Cuban question even in general terms. He proceeded at once to Washington.

MRS. CASTLE GUILTY.

San Francisco Society Woman Convicted of Theft.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The case of Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Castle, of San Francisco, who are accused of shop lifting, came up for trial in the Clerkenwell sessions. There were seven indictments against the prisoners, charging them with stealing articles, the total value of which was 43 pounds 10 shillings. Mrs. Castle was found guilty on all the indictments and sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

MRS. VANDERBILT DEAD.

Suddenly Stricken With Heart Disease at Scarsboro.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt died suddenly of heart failure at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, at Scarsboro, Westchester county, where she had been visiting since the marriage of her granddaughter.

Talk of an Extra Session.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—An extra session following immediately the inauguration of Mr. McKinley is, in the prevailing opinion here, certain. Senator Quay believes an extra session is certain. That was what he had in mind when he said: "We shall have a new tariff bill within eight months after McKinley's inauguration." Senator Quay has the habit of speaking by the card, and to get a new tariff bill passed by that time would require the calling of congress together as soon after March 4 next as possible.

Wing Shot Championship.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 7.—J. E. Riley and R. J. Elliott met in a 100 bird shoot for the American wing shot championship and the Kansas City Star cup, emblematic of the honor. Riley killed 27 straight, but after that fell down completely and Elliott won the match by a score of 92 to 81.

Bryan's Majority in Washington.

SEATTLE, Nov. 9.—With a few small precincts missing Bryan has a majority in the state of 8,922.

TERSE NEWS.

The grand jury of the Clerkenwell sessions court, at London, after consideration of the case of Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Castle, of San Francisco, returned a true bill against both prisoners on a charge of shop lifting.

About two thousand government employes have been added to the classified service by the issuance of an order by the president directing that the rules of the navy department regulating employment of labor at the navy yards shall not be changed without approval of the civil service commission.

Ira Burnige, aged 17, and Grace Saylor, aged 18, were drowned at Wheaton, Kansas, a few night ago. Returning home from a political meeting they attempted to ford Clear Creek and went down. The young couple were the only children of their respective families and were engaged to be married.

While John Jackson, John Adams, Wm. Taylor, and Bob Ellison, negro laborers, were working at a sugar cane mill near Wild Fork, Monroe county, Ala., recently they were fired upon from the darkness by unknown persons. All but Taylor will die. It is supposed to have been the work of white caps.

A dispatch recently received from Madrid says that the town of Huelva, in the province of that name, has been swept by a tidal wave from the Atlantic ocean. No details are given but the report says it is known that the loss of life has been terrible. The steamer Cartagena was overwhelmed by the great wave and most of the persons on her were drowned.

HESITATE NO LONGER.

Modesty in women is natural. It is one of women's chief charms.

No one cares for one who really lacks this essential to womanliness.

Women have suffered fearfully because of over-sensitiveness in this direction. They couldn't say to the physician what they ought to say to someone. Mrs. Pinkham has received the confidence of thousands. Women open their hearts to her. She understands their suffering, and has the power to relieve and cure.

In nearly all cases the source of women's suffering is in the womb. In many cases the male physician does not understand the case and treats the patient for consumption—indigestion—anything but the right thing.

It is under such circumstances that thousands of women have turned to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and opened their heart and lives—woman to woman—and received her help.

You ask how she can tell if the doctor cannot? Because no man living ever treated so many cases and possesses such vast experience.

Displacement, inflammation, torpid action, stagnation, sends to all parts of the body the pains that crush you.

Lydia E. Pinkham's "Vegetable Compound" is the sure cure for this trouble. For twenty years it has done its grand work and cured thousands.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

A cane worth $3,000, a gift from some friends, is carried by Dr. H. H. Hale, of Detroit. It is ornamented with gold and jewels, and in the head is a fine watch.

The canning of horse-meat is a thriving industry in Holland, whence it is shipped to France. The meat is largely supplied by worn-out horses from England.

CHARACTER IN WALKING.

The proud step is slow and measured; the toes are conspicuously turned out, the legs straightened.

Slow steps, whether long or short, suggest a gentle or reflective state of mind, as the case may be.

Where a revengeful purpose is hidden under a feigned smile the step will be slinking and noiseless.

Obstinate people, who in argument rely more on muscularity than on intellectual power, rest the feet flatly and firmly on the ground, walk heavily and slowly, and stand with the legs firmly planted and far apart.—Home Queen, Philadelphia.

Texas.

In the agricultural line, Texas leads all other states in the variety of its products. Cotton, corn, and the cereals grow and are raised in every section of the state, and in the central and southern portions sugar cane and sorghum cane are profitably cultivated. On the gulf coast two or three crops of vegetables are raised each year. Berries are shipped six weeks in advance of the home crop in the north. Pears, peaches, plums, oranges, figs, olives, and nuts all grow abundantly and can be marketed from two to three weeks in advance of the California crops. Large quantities of rice are now grown.

If the land seeker, the home seeker, and the settler desires to secure a farm larger than the one he occupies, on vastly more reasonable terms; if he wants more land to cultivate, a greater variety of crops to harvest, with proportionately increased remuneration, at a less outlay for cost of production; if he wants an earlier season, with correspondingly higher prices; if he wants milder winters, all the year pasturage for his stock, improved health, increased bodily comforts, and wealth and prosperity he should go to Texas.

Send for pamphlet descriptive of the resources of this great state (mailed free). Low rate home seekers' excursions via the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railway on Tuesday, November 17th, December 1st and 15th, 1896. H. A. Cherrier, Northern Passenger Agent, 316 Marquette Building, Chicago, Ill.

A new instrument, called the phonendoscope, enables the skillful medical man to hear the sounds emitted by all the organs in the human body, the heart, the lungs, the liver, etc., and discover if they are in a healthy condition, or otherwise.

A blotting paper towel has been invented. After a bath, the bather arrays himself in a cloak composed of blotting paper, and in a few moments he is dry.

Several prudent young ladies in Atchison, Kansas, have formed a society, and each has solemnly pledged herself not to marry a man whose salary is less than her own.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEHOLD.

In making a salad of fish, if you add a little cucumber pickle, chopped very fine, to the dish before the dressing is poured over, you will greatly improve it.

Anything with a meringue over it should be put in a cool oven and allowed to brown slowly if you wish to have it light. A strong heat toughens meringues.

If a bunch of grape leaves are put in the brine in which cucumbers are to be soaked for pickling, it will help keep the cucumbers sound and firm, and of a good color.

In blanching nut meats, pour over them boiling water and let it stand a few moments. Throw over them cold water and rub them between the fingers, and the skins will readily come off.

When the whites of eggs are used, and the yelks are not required at the same time, drop the yelks into a small cup or glass, cover the surface with a little cold water and keep in a cool place.

If corned beef, tongue or ham is left to cool in the water in which it is boiled, the meat will be much better and more moist. All boiled meats should be cooked slowly, and never be allowed to boil rapidly.

If whipped cream is wanted quickly, and there is no whip churn available, have the cream very cold, and put it in a glass fruit jar with an air-tight cover. Half fill the jar with the cream, fasten the cover tightly and shake the jar vigorously.

Use the graceful wild grasses as well as the cultivated ones for table decorations as long as they can be had. These grasses come in great variety and are beautiful and decorative. Foliage also may be used to great advantage at this season, and flowers are to be had all the year.

No person under sixteen years of age is permitted to enter a theatre or tavern in Heligoland.

Kept the Secret.

Jack—I went to the phrenologist last night.

Maud—What did he tell you?

Jack—I can't quite understand. He felt my bumps and coughed a bit, and gave me my money back.

Some of the Chinese think that women who wear their hair short will be transformed into men in the future world.

"The purest streams of human love,

But yield to pressure from above

A THOUGHT THAT KILLED A MAN!

He thought that he could trifle with disease. He was run down in health, felt tired and worn out, complained of dizziness, biliousness, backaches and headaches. His liver and kidneys were out of order. He thought to get well by dosing himself with cheap remedies. And then came the ending. He fell a victim to Bright's disease! The money he ought to have invested in a safe, reliable remedy went for a tombstone.

Warner's Safe Cure

is the only standard remedy in the world for kidney and liver complaints. It is the only remedy which physicians universally prescribe. It is the only remedy that is backed by the testimony of thousands whom it has relieved and cured.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

HOW TO CURE BILIOUS COLIC.

I suffered for weeks with colic and pains in my stomach caused by biliousness and had to take medicine all the while until I used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy which cured me. I have since recommended it to a good many people. Mrs. F. Butler, Fairhaven, Conn. Persons who are subject to bilious colic can ward off the attack by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms appear. Sold by J. L. Harr.

Everybody ought to know that the very best thing he can do is to eat apples just before going to bed. The apple has remarkable efficacious medical properties. It is an excellent brain food, because it has more phosphoric acid in easily digested shape than other fruits. It excites the liver, promotes sound and healthy sleep and thoroughly disinfects the mouth. It helps the kidney secretions and prevents calculous growths, while it relieves indigestion and is one of the best preventives known for diseases of the throat. No harm can come to even a delicate system by the eating of ripe and juicy apples before retiring for the night.—Bulletin of Pharmacy.

Wallaces' Farmer.

The farmers of Iowa have lost millions of dollars through the ravages of hog cholery, and as a result all with whom they deal suffer loss. We believe legeslation could be enacted which would to a very great extent restrict the desease, and the sooner we get about it the better.

Poultry financiers go to great lengths these days in following out their hobbies, but the biggest story we have heard lately is on a man down east who feeds his white chickens white corn. He claims it keeps their feathers from taking on that yellowish tinge so objectionable in white fowls.

Inoculation of hogs for cholery is likely to be pretty thoroughly tested in the west this year. Dr. Detmers, of Ohio, has been in Iowa for two months and has inoculated a large number of hogs in the vicinity of Oskaloosa and Jefferson, among others the herd of Howard & McAllister, of the latter place. Dr. Sykes, of Ill., has also been doing some work of this kind near Jesup. So far as we are informed those who have had their hogs inoculated are pleased with the results.

Hogs do not get lime enough in grain, and consequently require it in other forms. It is a prominent feature of wood ashes, and for that reason they are fed to hogs. The younger hog requires more than the older. Common practice meets this requirement but the reason for it makes it necessary. Animals not getting grain may not get enough of phosphoric acid and for that reason, young animals do not thrive well with out grain or its by-products. Young stock on grass rarely do well while thrift comes from adding a little grain. The young thing can not make its frame without the inorganic materials in such form as to be suitable. It will grow more on less feed than ever after, but the feed must have all the elements of growth suited to its age.

Frank Goodell, a farmer living north of town, has marketed timothy, hay and seed, raised on seventeen acres of ground amounting to $162. There is good money in the hay crop after all. —Britt News.

The man who gives help to another, learns how best to help himself.

Something is sure to be accomplished by the man who sticks to one thing.

As much bitterness and hate can be expressed in a word as can be fired out of a gun.

A good man finds good wherever he goes, because the good in him brings out good in others.

It is human nature to use things roughly, and when they break declare they never were good.

There is probably a time in the life of every man, when his hand almost touches the philosopher's stone.

Farmer Pfaff of Pettia County, Mo., raised 200 bushels of Kaffir corn on three acres of ground this season.

A New York woman committed suicide because her husband rode a bicycle too much, all of which she could have cured him of in one week by buying a tandem.

The Bank of England can scarcely keep the gold from coming to America by raising the discount rate or by advancing the selling price of eagles and bars. So long as England keeps on buying enormously of American products and selling little in return gold will come this way—until such time as America gets ready to invest surplus funds in England as England used to do over here.

A novel legal point is involved in a case now on trial in St. Louis. In August, 1895, Freeman O. Smith, a commercial traveler residing at Little Rock, bought a pair of shoes that were too tight for him. They chafed the skin of his little toe, but he continued to wear them, and for a while continue to wear them, and for a while tried to cure the sore without the aid of a physician. The toe became worse and a doctor was called in, but even his skill was unavailing, and Smith died of blood poisoning. Among other assets of the dead man's estate was an accident insurance policy. The company issuing it refused to pay the insurance on the ground that the blood poisoning was not due to accident, but to neglect.

Ignace Paderewski, the eminent pianist, has always been a source of boundless "copy" to newspaper men in this country and others. And it has been his lot to have sensational news concerning himself transmitted broadcast at all times. The faithful (?) cable is now responsible for two new items concerning him. One is that he has become as bald as a billiard ball, which would necessitate the intervention of a skilled wigmaker if he wants to retain his "pull" with the women, and the other is that he is hopelessly insane. The probability is that neither are true, but what is to be said of the unkind scribe who, taking up the baldness part of the story, claims boldly that "Paddy" has always worn a wig!

A waiter in a Chicago hotel, rummaging with some other colleagues among some unclaimed baggage in the cellar, discovered a wallet containing bonds of a southern railroad for $60,000 with $13,000 accumulated interest due on them. He turned them over to the police and now the hotel manager is suing for their recovery, claiming that they should not have been taken away. One George Craft owned the trunk and when, on June 7, 1894, the manager told him to pay his bill of $38.40, he was unable to do so and was turned out of the hotel, his trunk being held for the account. Now the question is, who was Craft, where is Craft, and, if he does not turn up, who does the money belong to? The manager, the waiter, or who?

In Nanuet, N. Y., live Henry Eskra and his wife. They still occupy the same house, but have not spoken to one another for twenty years. They quarreled then and agreed to divide the house between them, each taking three of the six rooms, which are divided by the passageway. There is a common door, but otherwise their ways are separate. On each side of the walk are three apple trees, so when the division was made their possessions were almost identical, but to-day a great difference is noticeable. The husband earns a living by various bits of job work and has kept his side of the house, garden and even the porch, in excellent repair, while the woman, dependent upon what her children give her, has been forced to allow her side to become very dilapidated, even her side of the porch is tumbling down and her three apple trees are dead from lack of pruning and care. The children have repeatedly endeavored to bring about a reconciliation, but their efforts have always been fruitless.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

DOMESTIC INFELICITY.

A Man Advertises for a Wife, Gets One and Is Sorry.

DES MOINES, Nov. 6.—A man named Mains, who advertised for a wife and finally got one, has hired about fifteen lawyers, with whom he is working to secure his wife's agreement to articles of separation. The woman is now residing at her home before she was married. She remained at the home of Mains, out near Menlo, but one night. They rode thither the night of the wedding in a driving rain. They were soaked to the skin, but there was fuel for a fire. And during the evening Mains drew out of his pocket a dagger, she says, a dagger a foot long with a silver handle and which he remarked as he drew it across his hand lovingly was sharp as a razor. Finally he returned it to his pocket, after talking to it some time in a low and indistinguishable voice. This is the story told by Mrs. Mains. She also says Mains told her that night that his former wife got up in the night time and climbed to the top of a windmill in the yard and fell off the top, killing her. All these horrors resulted in the prostration by fright of Mrs. Mains, who returned to her former home as fast as she could, and now articles of separation are said to be ready for signing.

EXTRA SESSION.

Legislature Will Not be Restricted to Business Named in Call.

DES MOINES, Nov. 7.—Gov. Drake has signified his intention of calling an extra session of the legislature for January 19. An impression prevails that the governor can limit the business to be done by the legislature in extra session; that nothing can be done except what is mentioned in the call. This is not true. The supreme court of Iowa held, in the case of Marford vs. Unger, in the Eighth Iowa, in 1859, that the legislature had the same powers in a special session that it had in a regular session.

DES MOINES, Nov. 9.—Gov. Drake has issued a proclamation calling an extra session of the legislature to begin on the 19th day of January.

IOWA'S VOTE.

McKinley's Plurality is 67,836—All Republican Congressmen Returned.

DES MOINES, Nov. 6.—The total vote of the state of Iowa is 286,192 for McKinley, 219,356 for Bryan, about 2,000 for Palmer, and Levering about 3,000. All of the republican congressmen have been re-elected by the following majorities: Clark, 3,011; Curtis, 3,642; Henderson, 10,703; Updegraff, 7,241; Cousins, 5,763; Lacey, 1,380; Hull, 6,301. Hepburn, 749; Hager, 2,363; Dolliver, 10,866; Perkins, 7,398.

BIG FIRE AT ATHELSTAN.

Five Business Houses, One Hotel and Two Residences Consumed.

ATHELSTAN, Nov. 8.—This town was visited by a serious fire which commenced at the corner on Main street and burned a full block. Five business houses, one hotel, and two residences were burned to the ground. Tennant's hardware and furniture store caught fire twice and Nightswonger's general store, city hall postoffice and Burrell's clothing store were saved after hours of continuous labor.

IOWA VOTE 500,000.

Much Larger Than Estimated by the Politicians.

DES MOINES, Nov. 6.—The total vote on Iowa on the head of the ticket was nearly 500,000 or at least 50,000 more than was anticipated. If this half million vote is taken as a basis, it will be seen that by the use of the usual multiple Iowa has many more inhabitants by at least 50,000 than the last state census gave the state. Probably the state population is nearer 2,500,000 than a trifle of 2,000,000.

Soldiers Home.

MARSHALLTOWN, Nov. 7.—Commander Ratekin, of the Iowa Soldiers' Home, in his annual report, says that the cost of maintenance for the year ending June 30 was $67,161.88. A new hospital, costing $40,000, has been built and equipped. It is 228 by 111 feet, and two stories high, and will have beds for 168 patients. The cost per capita of the care of inmates of all departments of the home is $111.92.

Fatal Fall Out of a Window.

LAMONI, Nov. 6.—Mrs. Zenas Gurley, mother of Hon. Z. H. Gurley, of Lamoni, fell from a second-story window, crushing her collar bone and receiving internal injuries from which she died within a couple of hours. It was thought that in a moment of temporary insanity she attempted to climb out of the window, with the above result.

Prisoners Escape.

STORM LAKE, Nov. 6.—Two burglars confined in the county's steel clad jail, sentenced to two years in the penitentiary, cut the steel bars in the cage, bent a bar in the window and escaped. A reward is offered for their recapture.

MURDER MYSTERY.

Unknown Man Shot in a Drunken Quarrel by an Unknown Man.

COLFAX, Nov. 7.—Two unknown men went into a dive in Oswalt, a deserted mining town two miles northwest of Colfax, and began drinking beer. They soon became quarrelsome and one of them attacked the other, who pulled a 44-caliber revolver and shot his companion in the bowels. Nothing is known as to the identity of the murderer or the wounded man, who will certainly die. The man who did the shooting escaped and is still at large, and the other is unconscious and has been ever since he was wounded, so that nothing can be learned in regard to either of them.

FIRE AT NEW MARKET.

The Little Town Almost Entirely Wiped Out.

CLARINDA, Nov. 9.—Fire at an early morning hour almost destroyed the little town of New Market, seven miles east of Clarinda. Eleven buildings, with most of the contents, were destroyed, including the hotel on the west side of the street. They were all frame structures, and very little insurance was carried. The Clarinda fire department was called on for help and went to the scene on a special train. The loss can hardly be less than $20,000 or $25,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

BREVITIES.

The Keokuk & Western railroad has been widened to a broad guage. The change was accomplished within 24 hours, two hundred men being employed in the work.

The winter term at Highland Park College, Des Moines, will open November 24th. The present term has been remarkably successful and a large winter attendance is assured.

Henry Groban, of Davenport, ended his life by hanging himself to the cellar door of his home. Deceased had been in poor health for some time and this is supposed to have caused him to commit the deed.

Mrs. S. L. T. Hutchinson died in Ottumwa a few days ago after a long illness. She was the wife of Senator J. G. Hutchinson, defeated by Boies for governor of Iowa in 1887. She was prominently connected with charitable and benevolent enterprises.

At Riceville recently A. Bessman's wagon and machine shop, together with a store room containing $2,000 worth of agricultural implements, was destroyed by fire. The loss is $4,000 with very little insurance. A dwelling house belonging to I. N. Marsh was badly damaged. Cause of fire is unknown.

Des Moines dispatch: Over one hundred men have been let out by the board of public works. They were city employes on street work, who have been grading streets and sidewalks, repairing bridges and culverts, etc. The reason for their discharge is lack of funds. Only the poll tax gang is kept at work. It is probable the ways and means committee of the council will get together soon to devise means for keeping up street work.

The sheriff and an armed posse captured Fred Holly near Larrabee and he confessed that he and a young man named Charles Whitcomb were the ones who robbed Charles Hinet about two weeks ago. Holly is only 16 years old, but Whitcomb is older and of a desperate character. They were arrested a few months ago as they were preparing to leave the country with a lot of stolen property, but released and Whitcomb escaped from the officers. Considerable plunder was found at the home of Whitcomb's father and mother. Sheriff Wheeler is determined to capture Whitcomb. A reward of $100 is offered for his capture.

On August 24 the city council of Des Moines adopted a resolution, submitting a proposition to the water company, by the terms of which the city proposed to issue bonds to the amount of $800,000, and with the proceeds derived from the sale of these bonds purchase the plant from Mr. Hubbell. The resolution was adopted under the provisions of the act passed by the legislature last winter, authorizing cities of the first class to acquire or construct their own water works system, and provided the proposition to the water company would be held open until November 1. As the company has given no indication that the proposition was agreeable to its owners, the mayor considers it as having been virtually rejected, and at a meeting of the council he submitted a written suggestion relating to the adoption of measures looking to the construction of a water plant to be owned and operated by the city.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—Chairman Hanna, of the republican national committee, has issued a statement in which he says that the following states with their 265 votes are absolutely sure for McKinley: California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, North Dakota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 6.—Chairman Jones, of the democratic committee has issued a statement conceding the election to McKinley. He claims Bryan has 190 votes and that the number may be materially increased by the official count.

Lincoln, Nov. 6.—Mr. Bryan received a message from Senator Jones, saying that he conceded the election to Mr. McKinley. Mr. Bryan at once sent the following telegram to Maj. McKinley. "Senator Jones has just informed me that late returns indicate your election and I hasten to extend my congratulations. We have submitted the issue to the American people and their will is law."

CANTON, Ohio, Nov. 7.—Major McKinley has sent this telegram to Hon. W. J. Bryan: "I acknowledge the receipt of your courteous message of congratulation with thanks, and beg you will receive my best wishes for your health and happiness."

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

Republicans Will Not Be Able to Take Control.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The next Senate, it is believed, will stand: republicans 44, democrats 33, populists and independent 13. This table takes all the states out of the doubtful column, placing Kentucky and North Carolina in the republican column, as Senator Butler said to-day that a free silver Republican would probably be returned by the fusionists, Delaware in the democratic column and Kansas and South Dakota in the independent and populist column. This will prevent the republicans from taking control of the senate unless some of those who bolted the republican platform at St. Louis should return and it is therefore believed that no tariff legislation can pass without considerable concession.

Will Take Official Count.

YANKTON, S. D., Nov. 9.—With the state complete except Hamlin and McPherson counties and three organized counties in the Sioux reservation, Bryan has a plurality in the state of 45. Hamlin and McPherson counties will give McKinley pluralities. The reservation counties are expected to go for Bryan. It will take an official canvass to decide the result.

The Vote in Kentucky.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 9.—Official returns show so many discrepancies in the votes for electors as to make it almost certain the electoral vote will be divided.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 9.—Official returns are now in from all but twelve counties and McKinley's net plurality is raised to 648.

Wefers Broke Two Records.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—At Georgetown, Bernard J. Wefers beat two amateur records one-fifth of a second. The first for a hundred yards was made in the remarkable time of 9 3-5 seconds and the second distance of 300 yards in 30 2-5 seconds.

IOWA PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

DES MOINES, Nov. 5.—Nine patents were issued to Iowa inventors last week; Minnesota 7; Kansas 4; Nebraska 2. Ten claims have been allowed to C. H. Miller of Marquette, Mich., for a bottle adapted to be sealed so it cannot be opened without breaking off an outward projection from the neck. The nature of the invention is indicated by the following one of the ten claims: An automatic seal for bottles, comprising a bottle having a groove in the outer surface of the neck, a lug in said groove designed to be easily broken off, a cap designed to cover the neck of the bottle, means for securing the cap to the bottle, and a spring secured to the interior of the bottle and designed to pass over the lug into the groove, so that the cap may not be removed without breaking the lug.

CHAPTER XII.—(CONTINUED.)

"How can it be your duty, Eleanor, if as you said—and it made my heart leap with joy—you love me, how can it be your duty to give me up and marry another? O, Eleanor, dear Ellie, think of my life-long devotion, my stern sacrifice, that refused to hear even a single word from you—my unceasing toil and incredible exertion to fit myself to stand in these doers a suitor for your hand, without a blush of shame! To have gained the long-prayed-for position, to find my love returned, and yet to lose you—have you thought how terrible a doom it is for me? Can it be a duty that would crush our hearts in the fulfillment?"

She wrung her hands.

"Forbear, O Walter—have pity on my weakness! All last night I wrestled in my agony to see the right, I came out of the bitter waters calm in self-renunciation, knowing it was my duty to give you up. Neither your grief nor my own anguish must drift me away from the position I defined then. Dear Walter, my childhood's friend, my protector and comforter always, help me now to be true to my own convictions of right!"

There was a solemn pathos in her tone—in her white face and imploring eye—that rebuked Walter's personal grief.

"Eleanor," said he, impetuously, "if I could see any reason for it—if it were not so contradictory to all my ideas of right—I would be wiling to bear my own pain to aid you!"

"Be sure I must be well convinced of the right of it ere I peril your happiness and mine. If you knew all you would be the first to bid me God speed upon my atoning sacrifice."

Walter was looking steadfastly into the beautiful face. Coming suddenly forward, while lip and cheek paled beneath the intensity of his emotion, he held out his hand.

"It is enough. I will bid you God-speed now. I renounce my hopes, Ellie—my Ellie, for whom I have lived, and striven, and hoped. I will give you up, even unto another's arms."

Lady Eleanor's head drooped forward to his shoulder; her cold white cheek touched his; her brown curls flung their sunny ripples against his jetty locks, while her quivering lips whispered:

"God bless you, Walter! It is pleasant now to think how short is earth—how enduring Heaven!"

He wrapped his arms around her, pressed her passionately to his heart, and then put her away. A step on the threshold startled them. Lady Annabel stood within the doorway, her sad glance wandering from one agitated face to another. She was evidently greatly moved, yet she came in with her accustomed stately grace, and greeted Walter with the usual salutation; then turning to her daughter, she said mournfully:

"I see how it is, my child; you deceived me last night, and my worst fears—when I knew Mr. Vernon had returned—are verified. I see that you love each other."

No answer came. Eleanor turned away her tearful face and Walter, his sensitive spirit stung by the thought that she would consider him as an interloper, raised his head in haughty silence.

"Eleanor, Eleanor!" came in a piteous voice, so full of yearning tenderness it seemed to convulse the poor girl's heart. "I asked no sacrifice of you. I should love and bless you still if you left me tonight to fly with the man you love. Hear me solemnly declare I dare not even advise you to marry other than him who holds your heart. Go and be happy, my child."

Walter bent forward joyously, but Eleanor only shook her head.

"I know you do not ask it, mother, but I know it is right—it is best, and it will give you peace. Walter himself has given me up, and blessed my effort."

Lady Annabel looked wildly from one to the other as she faltered:

"But if you love each other, how can he give you up, or you take yourself from him?"

"The consciousness of doing right will enable us both to conquer our ill-fated affection—will it not, Walter?"

Perplexed, grieved, heart-crushed, Walter could not refuse the pleading look in those blue eyes, and he answered—"Yes."

What was his astonishment to see Lady Annabel fall on her knees, and, catching her daughter's hand, bathe it with tears and dry it with kisses.

"My grand, heroic child!" cried she. "Will Heaven permit such innocence and worth to atone for the sin of others? I will pray that your noble sacrifice may not be needed; and yet I own, if it is completed, a mother's eternal gratitude will be yours. Ah, my own Eleanor, your pure hand shall lift away from me a load of remorse, and carry to another atonement for suffering and loss. But it must be free and voluntary—not from fear of my displeasure—remember that."

She sank down into an easy chair and raised a handkerchief to her face, while a violent fit of coughing ensued. The lace meshes came away, their snowy texture marked by vivid spots of blood.

Eleanor sprang to her side in consternation.

"Mamma, mamma," cried she, "you are ill; this excitement is killing you!"

"It is nothing new; it will pass presently."

"Mamma," said Eleanor with a new air of determination and energy, "once for all, let us settle this subject. I know the constant worrying about it is destroying you. Here I am a willing, voluntary mediator, thankful—so thankful, my darling mother, to be able to brighten thus little of your trial. I am sorry you should know how much it cost me to relinquish Walter, but believe me, I shall conquer it bravely Once entered upon the path, I shall not shrink; I shall never repent."

Lady Annabel raised the soft hand to her lips and whispered:

"I consent. May Heaven forgive me if I am wrong! After all," she added, "it may never be required of you. We may never find him, or he may have chosen another himself."

"Ah, yes," responded Eleanor soothingly, "we are making a great deal of trouble before we are sure there is need of it. But you, Walter, must never hope for anything except a friend's affection, a sister's love."

Walter sighed.

"So be it, then, I submit. May I know the name of him who wins the treasure I lose?"

"His name?" repeated Lady Eleanor, dreamily. "I do not even know it yet."

"What inexplicable mystery is this?" ejaculated Walter.

"Be content, Walter, and ask no more."

"My children," whispered Lady Annabel, "one thing I must require of you. The intention may be sincere and genuine, but the heart be treacherous. Mr. Vernon, I request you to continue your visits as usual. The test must be applied by actual trial. If my daughter can learn to school her own heart, it is well; if not, I would rather die myself than take her from you."

She rose from her chair, signed for Eleanor to support her, and bidding him as courteous an adieu as if only ordinary conversation had passed between them, left the drawing room.

So ended this exciting, perplexing, sorrowful interview; and restless and miserable, haunted by a thousand absurd misgivings, Walter returned to his studio. He remained a week away from Collinwood House, during which time he met the admiral, whose easy, unrestrained manner showed he was ignorant of all that had passed.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE ONLY event of importance meanwhile occurred at a private party to which he had gone with his fast and warm admirer, Viscount Somerset. They were in the midst of a gay crowd when the young lord, touching his arm, said formally:

"Mrs. Dacre, allow me to present to you our distinguished artist, Signor Vernoni. Vernoni, the Hon. Mrs. Dacre."

Absent-minded and sad, Walter had not heeded the lady's approach. There was no way to avoid an interview. She stood before him, her genial face aglow with smiles, her fair white hand extended toward him.

One moment Walter's fierce eyes glowed upon her; his haughty lip curled in scorn; then turning upon his heel, he ejaculated:

"No, no, I shall never take that hand in friendly greeting," and vanished in the crowd.

The startled Mrs. Dacre colored crimson, and the tears rose to her eyes; but seeing her husband's anger, she passed on eagerly, endeavoring to soothe the fierceness of his indignation at the insult.

The viscount hunted up Walter later in the evening, and said with grave, embarrassed face:

"Upon my word, Vernon, I hardly know what to say. I'm afraid you've made a decidedly ugly business. Dacre is in a rage, and declares your present popularity shall not save you from a horse-whipping, if you refuse to give him satisfaction. In fact, signor, it was rather a hard thing. I was taken aback myself."

"No doubt you were, and exceedingly indignant, my noble friend. I was grieved myself that it should happen, but I would die a thousand times rather than touch that woman's hand."

The viscount looked up as if doubting his sanity.

"Somerset," said Walter again, in a smothered voice of deep emotion, "if you met a woman who had wrecked the happiness, perilled the life, and blasted the good name of the dead father you loved once better than life, would you take her hand in yours, though etiquette, courtesy, and the whole world demanded it?"

"No," was the prompt reply, "but still I am mystified. Mrs. Dacre is a lady of irreproachable character—there is no mistake?"

"No," replied Walter, bitterly. "I know she was admired, respected and prosperous; she is none the less my father's deadliest foe."

"What is to be done?" asked the perplexed viscount. "Dacre's friend will wait upon you to-night."

"What—a duel? A mode of settlement as despicable as it is abhorrent! Well, well, it matters not. I cannot avoid it; you would all believe me a coward if I refused; so I will stand and let him shoot me, for wrong my own soul so much as to raise a deadly weapon against the life the Creator gave, I will not. Let him shoot; it is meet the son should perish as well as the father, through Annabel Marston's means."

The kind-hearted Somerset was really grieved and troubled.

"Is there no way to avoid it? Dacre demanded the reason for such insulting conduct; can I not hint something that will satisfy him?"

"You may say to that woman, I could not take her hand, because I am Paul Kirkland's son, who knew Annabel Marston of Lincolnshire in days gone by. Mark her face when you speak the name."

Throughout the next day Walter was in no enviable state of mind. All things looked gloomy and threatening. The sorrowful fate before Eleanor—the mystery of the motive that should make her thus voluntarily immolate herself upon the altar of duty—the hard struggle and desolate, loveless life before himself—the bitter resentment for his father's wrongs—all disheartened and dismayed him. He was in no mood to grieve when his friend returned saying Dacre would only be satisfied with a full apology. The lady, he said, remembered seeing once or twice in Lincolnshire a drawing-master named Kirkland, but was not aware how that should affect Signor Vernoni's conduct in the least.

"Let him shoot a dozen times if it will comfort him any," said Walter, sarcastically. "I can't say but I shall be the greater gainer by the operation. I will leave him an explanation of her 'once or twice.' Go back, and let him fix the place and time for the heroic deed. I will be on the spot, and I will stand as quiet, be sure, as the best target he ever shot against. Life has no charms; let him send me out as quick as possible."

"What would all London say to hear this!" cried the viscount in despair. "Signor Vernoni, the worshiped, petted artist, already crowned in youth with the laurel wreath, ready to throw away his life so recklessly. Ah, my friend, I might hint at a more powerful reason for you to seek escape from this. Lady Eleanor Collinwood, our pride and star, before whom so many plead in vain, looks upon you alone with favoring eyes. Will you forsake that enviable position?"

"Hush!" interrupted Walter sternly. "No more! Go at once and settled this wretched business!"

The viscount left him, and Walter flung himself upon the lounge and tried to sleep to escape the maddening tumult of thought. The effort was as vain as if the soft damask had been lined with thorns. Then he rose and paced to and fro, two hours or more, when his errand boy handed him a brief line from Somerset.

"To-morrow, at eight in the morning, at Blackheath."

He read the line two or three times and then said aloud:

"And this, then, is the end of all my high hopes, my unceasing endeavors—to die in a duel! I must see Eleanor again; she need not know it is a farewell interview, but it will be a consolation to me—possibly to her also—if the worst happens."

HERE'S a good time coming, the wiseacres say,
But it isn't here yet, you know;
When our pockets will bulge and our hearts be gay,
But it isn't here yet, you know;
Though we sit up all night
Till broad daylight,
The good time coming is just out of sight;
But it isn't here yet, you know.

But it isn't here yet, you know;
Though cables and trolleys still keep us in fear,
It isn't here yet, you know.
Though we sit up all night
Till broad daylight,
There's nothing but standing room left in sight,
So get hold of a strap and hang on to it tight,
For it isn't here yet, you know.

There may come a time, when in going up town,
But it isn't here yet, you know,
The men will stand and the women will sit down,
But it isn't here yet, you know;
Though we sit up all night
Till broad daylight,
His newspaper hides every man from sight;
There may come a time when they'll be more polite,
But it isn't here yet, you know.

And maybe she's here, you know.
She looks like a man from her sole to her brow,
But she isn't one yet, you know.
Though we sit up all night
Till broad daylight,
She talks of strange subjects to ears polite.
But we'd stand all the rest if she'd only not write,
For she isn't all there, you know.

When money talks there is not much use growing weary with thinking.

Good-by to straws of the political variety. We'll not have another crop till 1900.

It takes people a long time to learn that other people seldom notice their clothes.

The young woman will always look with greater favor on her lover's suit if it fits him well.

We are told that reforms are already started in Turkey. But it is so easy to sidetrack them, you know.

A majority of the inhabitants of the earth are happy in the idea that they are martyrs to something or other.

A drought in the northern part of South Australia has made the harvest a total failure. Numbers of farmers are destitute.

Even those who don't believe in long engagements will agree that engagements should be long enough for the two unfortunates to get acquainted with each other.

This is the time of year when it is dangerous to express a casual desire for anything, unless you really want it. If you aren't careful, you may get it for a Christmas present.

A wealthy New Yorker is having a palatial house built which will have many novel improvements in the way of comfort and luxury. Perhaps the most notable of these is a huge swimming tank which will cover the entire roof and which will be used as a skating rink in winter. This is "All the Comforts of a Home," with a vengeance!

Lillian Russell, beautiful but somewhat portly of late, positively announces that she is not going to marry Walter Jones. This is very gratifying news, for the fair prima donna's matrimonial movements have habitually been executed with such unexpected rapidity—and with such an evident taste for variety—that one can never tell what she is going to do, and we should therefore be pleased at being at least informed in this instance, as to what she is not going to do.

A voluble gentleman who has been serving with the Cuban army has returned to this country loaded to the gunwale with stories of Spanish cruelty. He says that while he was a prisoner at the Morro castle the authorities forced all the prisoners to go in swimming daily in order that as many as possible might be eaten by sharks. According to his account this plan worked admirably, as the sharks managed to eat up about as many daily as were freshly brought to the castle, thus enabling the governor to keep his list at about the same figure despite the constantly arriving newcomers.

United States Consul General Karal, at St. Petersburg, Russia, has sent to the state department at Washington an extended report of the world's wheat harvest for 1896. He gives the shortage as 185,485,542 bu. The United States, Canada, Argentina, Uruguay, Chili, Australia and East India decrease 165,392,959 bu; Russia, 56,575,467. Countries of consumption—importing—have 37,205,123 bu more than in 1895. Spain and Portugal only have bad crops. France has a crop about equal to last year. There is an increase in Italy and Great Britain. The figures appear to be a little mixed, but we give them as received. They show a liberal shortage, that is their value.

Miss Bertha Robinson, a tall Chicago blonde, has traveled all the way to New York to endeavor to extract from one David Weisenberger some $50,000 worth of broken heartage. He wrote to her as "My Birdie," and in cold black and white asked her mother for permission to marry "your adorable daughter." It would appear from this that the Chicago girl has got a "leaf pipe cinch" on the gay but frivolous New Yorker. The chief difficulty in all these matters, however, has been to decide just what the market price of a broken heart actually is. Some girls who appeal to the law in these matters have only had their hearts broken $5,000 worth, while the Brooklyn lady who was lightly loved by the chewing gum man has suffered, according to her view of the matter, $100,000 worth of damage to her affections. The calm philosopher is always haunted by a nameless fear that possibly the extent of the gay Lothario's bank account may in a measure influence the amount of suffering inflicted upon the lady, from which it seems fair to gather that in the present instance Mr. Weisenberger must be a rich man.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

DES MOINES UNION DEPOT.

The Contract Finally and Positively Closed for Its Erection.

DES MOINES, Nov. 13.—Des Moines is to have a new union depot, and the Des Moines Union road will erect it. It may not be built during 1897, but by December 31, 1898, it will be completed and in use. Contracts have been signed that call for the erection and completion of the building by that time. The directors of the Des Moines Union have ratified the contract. The deal was practically closed July 2, but for some reasons, best known to the officers of the Des Moines Union, definite information of this action was withheld until after the directors had ratified the contract.

REMORSE AND SUICIDE.

An Unlucky Tree Causes Orren L. Barton to End His Life.

OTTUMWA, Nov. 13.—Because he refused to cut down a tree, many years ago, when his father ordered him to, and because on this same tree, a few weeks ago, his half brother hanged himself, Orren L. Barton, of Ottumwa, aged 25, took poison and died in thirty minutes. Barton was in charge of the laboratory of the Kinyon-Young Drug company, where he worked all the forenoon. He went home in seeming good spirits and told his wife he would take quinine for a cold. She tried to prevent him, and only desisted when Barton threatened to kill her.

SIX BANDITS ARRESTED.

They Are Believed to Have Robbed Two Stores at Kirksville.

Their names were Will Wiley, Edwin Williams, Frank Stearns, James Miller and Frank Marsh. Wiley is a youthful Ottumwa rounder who has just completed his third term at Fort Madison. Stolen goods were found on each of the prisoners. They will be indicted by the January grand jury.

He is Accused of Having Murdered Mamie Peterson Last Spring.

CENTERVILLE, Nov. 14.—The trial of Ned Hemphill for the murder of Mamie Peterson, at Unionville last May, has begun at Bloomfield, it having been taken to that county on change of venue. Girl Steals a Diamond.

DUBUQUE, Nov. 15.—A young girl named Nellie Gallagher entered the jewelry store of Hopkins & Witty and requested to look at a ring. Several trays were handed out, and while Mr. Hopkins turned to wait on another customer she slipped a hundred dollar diamond ring into her pocket. The ring was missed at once and she was accused of taking it. She denied the charge but the ring was found in her possession and a policeman was called, who arrested and turned her over to the police matron.

CHEROKEE, Nov. 15.—The leading hotel of this city, the Washington house, burned to the ground. The loss on the building is about $20,000, with insurance of about $8,000. The fire caught in the chimney of the drying room in the laundry.

KREKEL MURDER CASE.

Son and Grandson of the Victim Are Implicated.

BURLINGTON, Nov. 16.—A sensation has been sprung in the Krekel murder case, which as yet is only known to the police authorities. Henry Teuscher, aged 21, and his uncle, Henry Krekel, grandson and son respectively of Louis Krekel, the old man whose body was found in a well on his farm, west of the city, have been in jail since August 1 on suspicion of having connection with the old man's death. Teuscher had confessed that he murdered the old man, and it was not thought that his uncle had anything to do with it. It has leaked out that Teuscher has made a full confession to the effect that he and his grandfather got into a row over money affairs, that he knocked the old man down, jumped on him, breaking three ribs, and then cut his throat. In doing this blood was smeared all over the room. Just then his uncle, Henry Krekel, came in, and, seeing the situation, helped his nephew load the body into a wagon and convey it to the old well in which it was found. The wagon was smeared with blood, and it took Krekel and Teuscher three days to get it and the house cleaned up. This confession implicates Krekel as accessory after the deed, and if proven, means hanging for the boy and fifteen years in the penitentiary for his uncle.

MURDER IN BOONE COUNTY.

Row at a Dance Ends in Bloodshed Near Boone.

BOONE, Nov. 14.—The Miners' Union at Fraser, a mining town eight miles from Boone, gave a benefit dance for Hiram Brown, one of their members, who lost a leg by accident a short time ago. During the dance, a miner, Ed Boyle, began using indecent language, and was told by the floor manager, Archie Knox, to stop or leave the hall. Not desisting, he was put out. He then got his brother, John A. Boyle, and returing to the hall, threatened to clean out the dance. Finally the two went out on the street, followed by a number from the hall. The talk was kept up and at last a number of shots were fired, resulting in Ed Boyle receiving two shots in the head and two in the stomach. He will die. John Boyle was also shot so that he will not recover, and two others received flesh wounds. It is not known who did the shooting, though the Boyles claim it was Archie Knox. No arrests have yet been made.

Mewhirter Recovering.

LARRABEE, Nov. 16.—H. D. Mewhirter, who was shot by Rev. E. L. Benedict in self defense, is able to be around again. The trouble between Mewhirter and Benedict was the result of a fight made by the ministerial association on Mewhirter for the illegal sale of liquors.

BREVITIES.

Gov. Drake on the 13th issued his annual thanksgiving proclamation.

Morning Sun, Louisa county, will be given free delivery in accordance with the experiment being made by the postoffice department for establishing such service for rural districts.

Iowa's best paper, the Des Moines Daily News, can be had for one dollar a year if ordered before January 1st, 1897. Clip out and enclose this item. Address The News, Des Moines, Iowa.

While working about a threshing machine near Sioux City recently, Clyde Sawyer, aged 13, was drawn into the machinery. A dozen bones were broken and scores of cuts and bruises sustained. Sawyer will die.

Larrabee dispatch: Harry Mewhirter, a druggist of Larrabee, is lying at death's door with a bullet lodged in his body just under the left nipple and near the heart. Rev. E. L. Benedict fired the shot that will probably end the young man's earthly career. Recently Rev. Mr. Benedict got out a search warrant and had Mewhirter's drug store searched for liquors. This enraged the druggist and yesterday he followed the minister into the Larabee Review office. The minister extended his hand to Mewhirter with peaceful intent. The enraged druggist at the same moment dealt Benedict a severe blow on the head with his fist. The Review man interfered and the men parted for the time being. Later, as Benedict was passing the drug store on his way to the postoffice, Mewhirter and a fellow named Burke jumped upon him and a tussel followed. The minister succeeded in freeing himself and drawing a revolver shot Mewhirter, who fell to the ground. He regained his feet however, and walked to the doctor's office. The physician has but little hopes for his recovery. Sheriff Wheeler was telegraphed for at Cherokee and the minister was taken into custody. The principals are both leading citizens of Cherokee county and the tragedy has created a widespread sensation.

ALL OVER THE WORLD

SPANISH SCARED NOW.

The Capture of Guayamaro by the Insurgents Was a Notable Victory.

KEY WEST, Nov. 13.—Passengers who arrived from Havana bring intelligence that the capture of Guayamaro was of more importance than at first reported. When the news reached Havana it caused great excitement. It was only partially printed, but was wired to Madrid and made a sensation. It is said it so stirred the people that they forced the government to oblige Weyler to take the field. The steamer Julia which arrived from Havana Sunday from Neuvitas reports no communication with the city of Puerto Principe since the 27th. Many bridges have been blown up, culverts burned and about seven kilometers of railway track torn up. Great anxiety prevails in Neuvitas regarding the fate of Puerto Principe. The steamer brought letters detailing the attack on Guayamaro. It appears that General Calixto Garcia, with a large rebel force and two pieces of artillery, attacked the place. He captured the trenches and destroyed ten forts surrounding the town. The garrison, 150 soldiers and twenty armed citizens surrendered but were released. They were sent to Puerto Principe under an escort. The citizens of the town were forced to aid the rebels in destroying the trenches, houses, etc. The church tower was blown up with dynamite. Much war material was captured. All stores were sacked, owners made prisoners and ransom asked.

ALLISON IS HOPEFUL.

He Thinks the Dingley Bill Will Be Passed in December.

DUBUQUE, Nov. 14.—Senator Allison, when shown a statement by Senator Chandler that the free silver senators would be in the majority after March 4 and would prevent the passage of a tariff bill without a free silver rider, said he believed the senate at the December session would obviate the necessity for a special session by passing the Dingley tariff bill, and thus giving the country a needed revenue, which all now admit the Wilson bill cannot yield. He thought it too early to tell whether there would be a free silver majority in the next senate. He believed there would be no important currency legislation at present. In reply to a suggestion that the cabinet makers were busy with his name, he said he was contented to remain in the senate.

VENEZUELA PLEASED.

Details of Settlement of Boundary Dispute Give General Satisfaction.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Nov. 14.—The details of the proposed settlement of the boundary dispute between Venezuela and Great Britain through the friendly intervention of the United States government have reached Caracas and appear to give general satisfaction. After a careful inquiry among the leading officials it appears that the Venezuelan government is disposed to settle the question on the lines indicated in the agreement between the United States and Great Britain without haggling over the minor points.

WORK FOR THOUSANDS.

Hundreds of Factories Opened Since the Election.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The Commercial Bulletin has been making a canvass of the manufacturing centers with regard to the revival of industries and has received reports from 240 manufactories that have been entirely shut down for months, but have resumed work on full time since the election. It also has reports from 124 establishments that have increased their force since the election. These 364 establishments represent about 160,000 men, who have not been drawing wages for many months.

"An Historic Moment."

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The St. James Gazette publishes a leading article headed: "An Historic Moment," in the course of which it says: "Salisbury's great admission of the principle that the United States has a right to intervene in the frontier disputes of the American powers and compel the disputants to arbitrate, altogether transcends in importance the question of the Guiana boundary. It is a formal recognition of the hegemony of the United States on the American continent and gives the president a position in the new world which medieval popes and emperors tried vainly to claim in Europe."

American Motor Won.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—The motor car race, from the Hotel Metropole to Brighton, forty-seven miles from London, was won by the American Duryea motor, which covered the distance in four hours. Fifty cars or carriages started.

Bryan's Plurality in Kansas.

TOPEKA, Kansas, Nov. 14.—Returns from all the counties in the state show Bryan's plurality to be 11,974.

BOLIVIA AND CUBA.

Senate Adopts a Resolution of Recognition Amid Much Excitement.

LIMA, Peru, Nov. 14.—Something of a sensation has be caused by the news received from Sucre, Bolivia, of a favorable report made by the committee of foreign affairs of the Bolivian chamber of deputies of a resolution to recognize the Cuban insurgents as beligerants. Further advices show that the congress held an exciting and stormy session to consider the resolution. The president of the chamber declared the resolution adopted and the senate proceeded to approve it in the midst of loud protests from the excited senators and great confusion in the senate chamber, so that the session had finally to be suspended.

M'KINLEY HAS 272 VOTES.

Electoral Vote is at Last Definitely Settled.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—It is now definitely known that McKinley will have 272 electoral votes and Bryan 175. In only one state was the vote divided, Kentucky giving McKinley 12 votes and Bryan 1. McKinley's popular majority will be about 1,000,000.

Advices received from Kaisarich, Asia Minor, state that a band of Turks have plundered the village of Evereck, killing 100 of the Armenian inhabitants and setting fire to and destroying fifty houses. None of the Turkish marauders were killed. Kaisarich has been thrown into a state of panic by the outrages.

Judge Baker, of the United States court at Indianapolis, Ind., has granted a restraining order in the case of S. C. Bramkamp, of Cincinnati, against the American Wire Nail trust. Judge Baker said that the trust was a "monster that seeks to prey upon the whole American people and which it is the duty of the courts and the lawmakers to come down upon with an unsparing hand."

The Farmers' National Congress, in session at Indianapolis, adopted a resolution requesting the incoming national administration to speedily adopt all practicable methods to obtain the concurrence of a sufficient number of nations to secure international bimetallism with the unlimited coinage of gold and silver as equal money of ultimate redemption and thereby to restore bimetallic prices for the world's commerce."

At Indianapolis recently a sensation was created in the national farmers' congress by B. F. Clayton, of Indianola, Iowa, the retiring president, who, in his annual address, assailed the beef combine and other trade combinations with great vigor. Mr. Clayton declared that it was a dark day for any state when it was invaded by trade combinations. He spoke of the beef combine and its aggressions, and urged state legislation to curb combines.

Key West, Fla., dispatch: Advices from Havana give the details of an outrage upon an American citizen and the butchery of nineteen non-combatant Cubans, including four women, by the Spanish soldiers. The massacre occurred near the town of San Jose de Las Layas, Havana province. A detachment of Spanish soldiers surprised six insurgents, who, however, made their escape, which angered the Spaniards and they began to raid a house in the neighborhood, alleging the inhabitants were in sympathy with the rebels. The Spaniards went to the sugar estate of Frederick L. Craycroft, who went there from Indiana three years ago. Some soldiers entered the house and two of them seized Mrs. Craycroft and assaulted her. The husband, in his desperation, rushed to his wife's aid, but was struck down by a sword in the hands of an officer. Two terrible gashes were made in his back and his right arm was nearly severed. The Spaniards looted the house, took $850 in cash and then raided other houses on the estate. They burned eight buildings and shot and killed nineteen inmates, four of whom were women.

BY M. T. CALDOR.

CHAPTER XIII.—(CONTINUED.)

Whereupon he rose, and went out into the street. He strolled aimlessly around until the gray twilight wrapped the great city in a gloom more dense than that of the smoky day-time fog, until a thousand blinking eyes opened bright and glittering along the straight line of the street's humble relief sentries for the stars, that had hid themselves in sullen clouds of black. Then he sought admittance at Collinwood House. Owing to the indisposition of Lady Annabel, the drawing-room was free from visitors, but Eleanor came down immediately upon receiving his name. She looked tired and dispirited, but smiled cheerfully when she saw him.

"I should not be glad to see anyone but you, Walter, for I am somewhat fatigued. Mamma has been ill all day, and I have been extremely anxious. But I shall look for you to comfort me, as you always used to in the old days. Sit down and talk, and let me luxuriate in listening."

He sighed.

"I fear I shall scarcely enliven you. I am somewhat dull myself, but I will do my best."

So they strayed off into a conversation, commencing with present London experience, but soon wandering away to the old life. They forgot present grief and care to recall the wild beauty of those far-off haunts. They talked of the cool green shadow flung by the Hibiscus tree over the grave of Tom—of the musical dash of the surf beneath the coral rock—of the tall palm from which so long streamed hopelessly their tattered signal-flag—of his father's watchful care—Tom's simple but noble nature, and his heroic devotion. Was either aware how utterly had been fulfilled the prophecy of Mr. Vernon? They had gained the world—its prizes of fame and wealth and honor, and yet their bruised hearts yearned wistfully toward the innocent tranquility, the untroubled peace of the retreat beneath the palm and bread fruit grove.

The time passed rapidly, and they were startled when a servant entered.

"My lady wishes to know if Mr. Vernon is with you, and if so she would like to see you both in her apartment."

"Has my uncle gone?" asked Eleanor. "I left him with her a few moments ago."

"Lord Collinwood has been gone an hour or more."

"An hour! Have we talked so long? Come, Walter, let us obey her summons."

They found Lady Annabel in an easy-chair, dressed in a snowy Cashmere wrapper, which set off becomingly the glittering dark eyes, raven braids and feverish cheeks of the invalid. She was evidently somewhat disturbed.

"I sent for you, Mr. Vernon," said she at once, "because the admiral has just related a rumor that came to him on his way hither, and it has made me very uneasy. I trust you will contradict it. Report says there is to be a duel between my friend Geoffry Dacre and yourself."

Walter's eyes fell—his face showed unmistakably the truth of her suspicion.

"I am deeply grieved," said she, leaning wearily against the damask cushion. "At any time it is so revolting—but for you—"

"For me it is as hateful as for any one else," interrupted Walter, proudly, "but I am driven into it. I assure you I have no thought of taking your friend's life. I shall not even fire the pistol but if he demands a chance to shoot at me, he is welcome to it. The consequence matters not to me, and few will mourn for me."

Eleanor had listened aghast with horror. She could restrain herself no longer, and regardless of her mother's presence she sprank forward and caught his hand.

"A duel! Walter, Walter, you will break my heart. Few to mourn for you? Do you not know it will kill me to see you sacrificed in that horrible way? Promise me quick, Walter—promise me, that for my sake, this wicked deed shall not be done."

"Eleanor," said Lady Annabel, authoritatively, "come here, my child; you forget yourself; leave it with your mother to remonstrate with Mr. Vernon. Now," continued she, when Eleanor had mutely obeyed, holding fast to her daughter's hand, "may I ask, Mr. Vernon, if my daughter can be any way connected with this affair?"

"Not at all, your ladyship. Mr. Dacre's anger arises from the fact that I refused to be introduced to his wife—or rather to take her hand after introduction."

She looked bewildered.

"And why should you be so unreasonable? I do not understand."

"I did not expect you would, no one but myself knows the injury and desolation that woman has brought to me through my father's life. I should need a score of pistols to compel me to touch her traitorous hand."

"You speak bitterly. I have known my Cousin Annabel from her childhood, and never knew an unkind word or deed to come from her. Of course I know nothing of your father's history. Are you sure there is not some strange mistake?"

"You shall ascertain for yourself," answered Walter suddenly. "I intended to leave my father's life for her to read. You may read it to-night, and then answer me if I am not justified in refusing to clasp that woman's hand. Nay, send me word before eight in the morning, and if after learning that sorrowful story you bid me apologize to Mrs. Dacre, I declare solemnly I will do it. I shall only agitate you by remaining longer. You know my wish respecting the manuscript, which I will send to you immediately, Lady Eleanor. Do not grieve for such a hapless soul as mine. God bless you! Good-night."

Walter returned to his own lodgings, dispatched a messenger with the manuscript to Collinwood House, and sat down to write what he believed his last message to Eleanor. He was interrupted by the viscount.

"I have just seen Dacre," said he. "He wishes to change the hour of meeting, and make it as early certainly as seven. The rumor has got out, and he fears a police interruption. Have you any objection?"

"None," briefly responded Walter, keeping on with his writing.

"Ah, Vernoni, I cannot bear to think what may happen to this hand of yours, so magical with the brush. For mercy's sake give me some little word of apology."

"Apology — pshaw! That woman knows what she is about. There can be no apology; she thinks my death will make her safe. Leave me, my kind friend, if you have no better consolation than that."

Only once, through that feverish, restless night was Walter disturbed. A servant came to the door, saying a strange man below wished to see him immediately. Not suspecting it was a messenger from Lady Annabel, but imagining it had something to do with the police detention, he refused to see him.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE threatening clouds of the past night gave out slow drops of rain, pattering dismally on the pavement, as Walter's haggard face looked forth from the chamber window. It was well in consonance with his feelings. He went about his toilet duties with a sort of stolid calmness, wound his watch with scarcely a throb of pain, when the thought that long before its ticking ceased his hand might be cold in death. Then, after a hasty cup of coffee, he wrapped himself in his cloak and went forth to the appointed rendezvous with his second.

Somerset was waiting for him with a cabriolet. When they reached the field they found Dacre waiting there. The moor looked black and dreary in the dripping rain, without the pleasant prospect clear weather gave it, missing sorely the bright glimpse of the Thames, the huge city with St. Paul's noble dome rising out of the smoky belt below, and the white-winged fleet waiting around the wharves, like carrier doves ready for their mission.

Silently the ground was measured, the glittering weapons examined and handed to their owners. Walter folded his arms over his with a scornful smile. Then was raised the fatal handkerchief and an awful stillness settled a moment on the air, but it was broken suddenly by a wild scream in a woman's voice.

All turned in alarm. A carriage came tearing through the misty clouds, the coachman lashing recklessly the plunging horses. Scarcely a moment after its appearance the door was flung open and a woman sprang frantically into their midst. What was the astonishment of all to see, as she flung back her veil, the surpassingly beautiful, but ashy white and mournful face of Lady Annabel Collinwood. She sprang to Walter's side.

"Thank God, I am not too late! Rash boy!" she added, with unutterable pathos. "For what shadow would you peril the life that is dear to Eleanor? I have read your father's woeful story, and yet I say you must apologize to Mr. Dacre and leave this dismal place."

"Apologize—for refusing the hand of Annabel Marston—never!" ejaculated Walter, firmly.

"Hush, hush, Paul Kirkland's son—it is I who am the Annabel Marston of his story."

Had a thunderbolt fallen at Walter's feet? He stood transfixed in astonishment, staring wildly into her face. The pistol dropped from his nerveless grasp, but no word came from his paralyzed tongue.

"Yes," said she, slowly, "it was I, and my poor cousin is cleared from your suspicions, Mr. Dacre. The youth is not so insane as you believe. He had better reasons than you mistrust. The mistake arose in your wife's name. We were both Annabel Marston, of Lincolnshire; but it was I alone who knew Paul Kirkland. Let me see you clasp hands before I go."

Walter extended his hand mechanically. Mr. Dacre shook it warmly. Then Lady Annabel motioned for Walter to assist her to the carriage. He did so, folding his arm carefully around her to steady her faltering steps, and yet it was the Annabel Marston he had taught himself to abhor and despise. She smiled mournfully at his assiduous care for her, and said, faintly:

"Go home with me, Walter, and you shall know the secret of the mournful story. Perchance you may feel more sympathy with your father's destroyer than you have believed possible."

Walter took the seat beside her, and though not another word was spoken, never removed his eyes from the wan, deathly face that lay back wearily against the cushions. Was this the proud, stately, admired woman before whom nobility and genius bowed in homage? that Lady Annabel whose perfection and superiority shamed even the virtuous? the woman who had deliberately deceived a loving, trusting heart, sold herself for dross, dipped her fair hands in crime? No wonder Walter walked as in a dream when he followed up the polished staircase to the luxurious, elegant room of Lady Annabel.

Eleanor's pale face just looked in a moment, and was vanishing, when her mother called her.

"Come in, my love; I need you. Take away my hat and cloak, and bring my cordial, without calling Claudine."

The affectionate daughter complied, gently removing the bonnet and stroking fondly the glossy ebony hair. Lady Annabel rested a few moments after drinking the cordial, and then said, calmly:

"Sit down here by my side, my children, and I will relate the humiliating story, which my poor Eleanor has heard before, and scarcely yet recovered from the shock. I was brought up at my grandfather's, for my mother died at my birth, and my father lived only two years after her. My earliest remembrances are of the childish terror with which I regarded my father's sister, the Hon. Pamelia Marston, and of the passionate love lavished upon the only being who cared for me, my Aunt Marcia Wellesford, my mother's eldest sister. A little later came an intense hatred of my beautiful cousin Flora, the especial pet and pride of the Marstons. My father married against the wishes of his family, and from the moment he brought his bride to his father's house, my mother was the object of his haughty sisters' dislike and persecution. I know this no better now than I realized it then; for the enmity bestowed upon the mother was not buried in her coffin, but survived to torment me.

The Neustretter.

"The Neustretter," who stirred the Bois and Champs Elysee loungers with envy of her clothes and turnouts what time the Vanderbilt divorce was on the tapis, is again in evidence with equipages of the newest and finest, and another New York millionaire has set the tongues of tout Paris wagging.

The funny part of the affair is that the millionaire accredited with the present episode is well past the half century and up to the present time has lived with the regularity of an old-time New England deacon, without a suspicion of wild oats about him.

In his youth and early manhood, when fredaines are to be expected, he lived in the odor of respectability, although a man of great wealth, wide travel and yachting propensities and now—Ichabod!

Well, humanity is a curious compound and men make queer breaks. In this present case a number of cognate and connected sinners are chuckling and conversely several aristocratic families, whose names are synonymous with the straight and narrow path, are plunged into the depths of gloom.—New York Journal.

Several prominent citizens of Charlestown, Mass., have urged that the Bunker Hill monument should be illuminated with electricity, but the idea does not meet with popular favor.

IT AMUSED THE OLD MAN.

They Helped Him to Get Away with His Dog.

The old man came down to the suburban station leading a most reprehensible dog. Leading is hardly the word, for in reality he dragged the unwilling animal after the fashion of a sled. With coaxing words he lured the scraggy beast on, and finally he got it safely stowed under the bench on the shady side of the station. He bought a paper then, and settled down to wait twenty minutes for the cityward train. Mr. Huffman and Mr. Jodyngs had marked the approach of the old man and had smiled somewhat at his trouble when the dog had pulled back with greatest force. "It's funny, isn't it," said Mr. Jodyngs, "that an otherwise reasonable and sane man will take up with such a dog as that and treat it as a pet?" Mr. Huffman assented, and said he supposed the old man would go into paroxysms of wrath if anything were to happen the dog. That suggested an idea, and Mr. Jodyngs nearly burst with laughter as he thought upon that idea.

"Suppose we steal the dog and put it on the northbound train, and when the old man finishes his paper and goes to take the city train he will be furious." This was Mr. Jodyngs' idea, and Mr. Huffman came near exploding, it was so funny. Mr. Huffman sat down next the old man, so as to conceal the workings of Mr. Jodyngs, and Mr. Jodyngs, with suppressed snorts of laughter, untied the twine and hauled the dog around the corner of the station and into the express office, where he paid a glad dollar and expressed the sorry beast to a fictitious John Smith at a station a dollar's worth up the line. The old man continued reading, while the up train stood at the platform, and he did not wake up until the whistle of the incoming cityward engine was sounded at the road crossing. Then he looked hastily for his dog.

"Where's that dog?" he asked of his city-bound fellow-townsmen, who had gathered about in obedience to the invitation of Mr. Jodyngs. With fierce peals of laughter Mr. Huffman told him that the household pet was on the way to Milwaukee. Mr. Huffman explained the joke, and clapped the old man on the back in delight.

The face of the latter was a study. He looked at Mr. Huffman wonderingly.

"By thunder!" he cried, "that's funny! You see, I brought the dog to the station to-day, intending to carry him as far in toward town as Jefferson Park and there I had intended to kick him off. He's a blamed nuisance around the house, and I wanted to get rid of him the worst way. Much obliged, Jodyngs."

But Mr. Jodyngs, with his mind dwelling on his dollar, was a pillar of self-kicking silence.—Chicago Record.

How Eagles Fly.

An eagle circling in the air maintains his wings steadily motionless, but he spreads his tail as wide as possible and works it like the quarter revolution of a screw. The reactionary force which he thus displaces drives him forward, and, by exerting more force of pressure with one side of his tail than with the other, he diverts his course either to the right or the left. The change in the bird's position is attended with short, quick motions, as the point of one wing is stretched forward, while that of the other is turned backward correspondingly.

These short, convulsive movements of the tail escaped the observations of the ornithologists until quite recently, and the fact of them not being noted caused many exhaustive articles to be written on the "Mystery of the Eagle's Flight." Stein der Weisen, the Austrian naturalist, appears to have been the first to notice the rudder-like motions of the eagle's tail. He says: "These motions of the tail would probably have escaped me also, but for the fact that I had so often observed the peculiar construction of the side tail feathers." It is interesting to the naturalists and the laymen alike to know that "the mystery of the eagle's flight" has at last been explained.—St. Louis Republic.

Hopeful.

A gentleman from London visiting Scotland, having heard that a man residing in the district where he had put up had just completed the 100th year of his age, and being anxious to see the centenarian, paid him a visit. In the course of conversation the cockney congratulated the old man on the healthy appearance he had at his time of life, "but," says he, "I presume you do not expect to see the end of another 100 years?" "I'm noo very sure about that. You must mind I'm a heap stronger the noo thin whin I started wi' the first hunner," was the old man's reply.—Tit-Bits.

Where He Failed.

Crimsonbeak: "You know Fakely, the mind-reader?" Yeast: "Yes." "Well, yesterday he had to go back to the house three times to ascertain why his wife tied a little piece of cord around his finger."—Yonkers Statesman.

CAN'T HELP TELLING.

No village so small.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, names known for all that is truthful, all that is reliable, are attached to the most thankful letters.
They come to Lydia E. Pinkham, and tell the one story of physical salvation gained through the aid of her Vegetable Compound.

The horrors born of displacement or ulceration of the womb:

Backache, bearing-down, dizziness, fear of coming calamity, distrust of best friends.

All, all—sorrows and sufferings of the past. The famed "Vegetable Compound" bearing the illustrious name, Pinkham, has brought them out of the valley of suffering to that of happiness and usefulness.

FINE THINGS IN CHINA.

The newest pate cups, which are much crinkled in shape, are reproductions of old Minton in lovely shades of primrose yellow.

For the center of the table the round or oval mirror is now supported by a raised stand of old silver, which rests on delicately-wrought claws, holding a crystal ball.

There is a revival of the beautiful Minton ware, and bouillon cups, game sets and pate cups are reproduced in all the exquisite shades for which that porcelain is noted.

For mantel sets and cabinet ornaments Limoge enamel comes in beautiful shapes and designs. Mounted in gold and decorated with medallions, they greatly resemble the famous Sevres ware.

The newest dinner sets are marvels of beauty, both in decoration and shapes. Green—brilliant grass green—with a heavy relief of gold seems to be the favorite color, while the shapes are decidedly low and irregular in outline.

A novelty in cut glass is a mammoth cigar jar, in shape resembling a pickle jar, but with the distinguishing feature of a large hollow space in the cut stopper, in which a moist sponge is placed to keep the fragrant Havanas in just the proper condition.

A novel ornament for the drawing-room is a hanging flower jardiniere. Suspended from a wrought iron bracket are half a dozen vases of Italian faience, in odd flower-like shapes, resembling, tulips, orchids, etc., and these when filled with delicate trailing vines look as if part of the luxuriant growth.

Crystal with delicately-traced patterns in raised gold have for the moment supplanted the heavy cut glass. Connoisseurs proclaim that wine from a thin glass tastes better than from a heavy one, be it ever so superbly cut; consequently the craze of the hour is for the exquisite Venetian and Bohemian ware.

He is in the drug business, a member of the firm Johnson Bros of that place: and they handle a great many patent medicines for throat and lung diseases. He had all these to chose from, and skilled physicians ready to respond to his call, but selected this remedy for use in his own family at a time when his child's life was in danger, becanse he new it to be superior to any other; and famous the country over for its cures of croup. Mason City turns out a bold bad female robber. Burglaries have been numerous about here for six months past, money and jewelry were stolen promiscuously. Yesterday it was found where some rings and eye glasses had been made over, and they were discovered to be some of the stolen property. Officers were notified, and while working additional clews, the female got an inkling of what was going on and skipped, and can not be found. She was an intelligent and apparently refiued young lady and gave her name as Miss Scepta Sutherfand, but this is thought to be assumed.—Cedar Rrpids Sunday Republican.

A reader of the Wallace Farmer of St. Joseph, Mo. writes and wants to know how much lower than freezing point will the temperature have to get to freeze apples. It is said frozen apples will thaw at twenty-six degrees and if so, undoubtedly they will not freeze in a temperature above twenty-six degrees, which is four degrees below freezing point. It is also said that perfectly ripened apples can be thoroughly and solidly frozen at a temperature of ten degrees below freezing and he saved by thawing them out in cold water if taken in time. When frozen at a temperature of fourteen degrees below nothing will save them.

Wallaces' Farmer.

Cows and calves can stand a great deal of dry cold, although it dose not pay the owner to subject them to it, but wet cold very quickly humps up their backs. No time on the farm is more profitably spent than in providing dry straw bedding for the cows and calves on cold nights.

If the water tanks have not been banked up with manure and straw to prevent freezing there is no time to be lost. We believe that if the cattle get the water at the temperature at which it comes from the well there is not much necessity of warming it, but their is certainly a large loss if the cows are compelled to drink ice cold water.

If there is anything that will take the tuck out of a dairy cow it is such weather as we had the latter part of last week comming after the mild fall weather. The best of grass is not very good for dairy cows at this time of the year unless it is fed in a warm barn—something that is of course impracticable.

The article on skim-milk calves in this department last week should be read and re-read. The lack of knowledge of how to raise calves on separator skim-milk has been the cause of many a creamery failure. Good calves can not be raised on separator skim-milk alone, but it is all right when other feeds are used in connection with it.

It may now be taken as settled that in the opinion of the great majority of those who have given thought to the matter the Short-horns are most profitable on those farms where it is the desire to practice both dairying and beef-making. When it is desired to make a specialty of dairying the Jerseys and Holsteins are the most desirable breeds.

To cure all old sores, to heal an indolen ulcer, or to speedily cure piles, you need simply apply DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve according to directions. Its magic-like action will surprise you. Harr.

Pillsbury's Offer.

For the next week everyone purchasing a 48 lb. sack of Pillsbury's Best Flour will receive a novel and useful rotary biscuit cutter free. This biscuit cutter which Pillsbury gives away with his flour cannot be bought elsewhere and can only be secured by buying a sack of Pillsbury's Best.

Pillsbury has sent 100,000 biscuit cutters to Iowa, to be given away by the grocers selling his flour during the next week. They are extensively advertising their flour in Iowa and are evidently intent upon winning the trade. Their trade mark is "Pillsbury's Best Feeds the World." One would think them nearly correct in the assertion when he stops to think that they turn out 25,203 barrels of flour every working day in the year.

To those not familiar with the striking merits of this flour, it may be interesting to learn that the wheat for Pillsbury's Best is selected only by chemical analysis. Not a hundredth part of the wheat grown in America is good enough for it. The wheat with the most health giving nutriment is used. The rest is sold.

Pillsbury's Best is a high grade flour, made from wheat grown in the famous Red River Valley of North Dakota, and they claim it makes more bread, better bread and whiter bread than any other flour.

Mr. C. A. Pillsbury makes the statement over his own signature that Pillsbury's Best goes one-fifth farther than any other flour milled. He therefore contends that it is cheaper for a housewife to use Pillsbury's Best than to use an inferior flour.

THE SULTAN TO REFORM.

"The Sick Man of the Bosphorus" Dosed With European Civilization.

Paris dispatch: Advices received from Constantinople show that when the sultan received a report of the speech delivered recently by M. Hanotaux, the French foreign minister, in the chamber of deputies, in response to an interpellation demanding to know what action France would take in defense of the Armenians, he sent one of his secretaries, M. Cambon, to the French ambassador, who impressed upon the secretary the urgency that existed for the sultan to adopt measures that would reassure public opinion and satisfy Europe. The Turkish ambassador in Paris has now imformed M. Hanotaux that the sultan has decided upon carrying out the following reforms: The release of prisoners throughout the empire against whom no charges are preferred; to instruct the police that peaceable Armenians are not to be persecuted; to convoke an Armenian assembly to elect a patriarch; to court martial Mazhr Ley for allowing Father Salvator to be murdered; to dismiss the vali of Diarbekir for the share he took in the disorders there; to precisely instruct the valis to repress violence; to undertake the indemnification of the Roman Catholic convents in Anatolia, which were damaged during the outbreaks; to assist the inhabitants of the districts which suffered most, and to issue shortly a decree ordering the prompt execution in Anatolia of the reforms granted in 1895, and the extension of these reforms to the whole empire. M. Hanotaux thanked the ambassador for the information and told him that he had precisely instructed M. Cambon to watch the application of these preliminary measures.

THE DINGLEY BILL.

Possibility of It Passing the Senate During the Next Session.

Washington dispatch: There is considerable talk concerning the possibility of the passage of the Dingley tariff bill during the coming session of congress. It all depends on the attitude of the silver senators and a belief is entertained that they will not stand in the way of its passage. The Dingley bill was passed by the house of representatives on the 26th of December, 1895, before any other business had been transacted by the present house of representatives. It provided for duties on raw and manufactured wool equivalent to 60 per cent of those imposed by the McKinley act of 1890. A duty of 60 per cent is imposed upon lumber and its manufactures, and the last section provides for a horizontal advance of 15 per cent of the duties imposed upon all other articles named in the Wilson-Gorman bill, except sugar. According to the provisions of the bill these new duties were only to be temporary and continue until the first of August, 1898, but it will be easy to amend it in that particular.

GROVER ENDS THE TALK.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—To a senator who called upon him to inquire in repect to the war rumors in regard to Cuba, President Cleveland replied that the position of this government was as stated in his last annual message to congress, one of traditional sympathy with a people struggling for autonomy and freedom, but nevertheless this government felt its plain duty to honestly fullfil every international obligation. The president further said that every precaution had been taken so that if occasion should arise in Cuba the United States could assert itself with force, but he did not think that occasion would arise. Secretary Lamont was wore outspoken and expressed his individual opinion that some authoritive statement should be made to put an end to the disturbing and unjustified rumors of war.

IOWA PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

DES MOINES, Nov. 10.—Good times are reported at hand. The banks are willing and anxious to loan money. Gold is being taken out of its hiding places and its owners now looking for places where it may be invested profitably. There is no more honorable or profitable business than manufacturing and selling patented articles. For several years the manufacturing interests of the country have been at a standstill. Whatever the cause, it is a fact that most of them will be reopened in the near future to supply the demands of ordinary business. Another fact, nearly every profitable manufacturing industry is engaged in making patented articles. Now, before they start up and have all their patterns and machinery made, is the time for you to introduce that idea of yours, and advance the particular branch of industry to which it belongs. There should be thousands of novelties placed in the market during the ensuing year to replace similar articles. If you have an idea that you think may be of value, we would be pleased to advise you as to its novelty and patentability free of charge.

VENEZUELAN VICTORY.

All Arrangements for Arbitration Have Been Made.

Washington dispatch: The king of Sweden and Norway, Oscar II, has been chosen by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain as the fifth official arbitrator of the Venezuelan boundary question. The other arbitrators, four in number, are to be designated, two by the lord chief justice of England, and two by the chief justice of the United States. This is the final and most important feature of the treaty for the complete adjustment of the long pending Venezuelan controversy. The treaty was concluded in Washington at the British embassy, Sir Julian Pauncefote representing her Britannic majesty and Secretary Olney the United States. The main point of the treaty is that King Oscar II is the fifth or decisive arbitrator. It was deemed best to make this choice rather than to leave it to the selection of the other four arbitrators. The latter are assured of being men of eminent judicial attainment, as their choice is left entirely to the judiciary of the respective countries. The essential feature of the treaty is that fifty years actual possession is to constitute title. With this limitation as to the settled districts, the entire sweep of the Venezuelan boundary is placed in the hands of the court of arbitration. The treaty covers only Venezuela, and the question of general arbitration between the United States and Great Britain is left to future negotiations. The court of arbitration is expected to sit at Stockholm. From the Venezuelan standpoint, a final agreement for any kind of arbitration is a distinct victory. Venezuela has asked for arbitration for forty years. Great Britain's reply has always been that while arbitration was desired, yet the settled districts were regarded as sovereign British soil not open to arbitration. By Salisbury's statement arbitration will proceed on the acceptance of the old common law rule of proscription. The understanding is that the entire Venezuelan boundary will be thrown open to arbitration, it remaining for Great Britain to show that certain portions have been occupied by her subjects so long, peacefully, uninterrupted and publicly as to make conclusive her territorial presumption.

DOES THIS MEAN WAR?

Railroads Asked Regarding Ability to Move Troops.

CHICAGO, Nov, 13.—A special dispatch to the Inter Ocean from Washington says: "The war department has called on the leading trunk line roads running to Key West, New Orleans and the other gulf ports for an immediate statement of their capacity to move troops, supplies, and heavy war material. The information demanded is complete to the most minute details, embracing such questions as: 'If you are required to move 5,000 troops over your lines with necessary equipments and supplies, how long after notification will you require to perform the service?' Caution as to secrecy is imposed on all roads called on for information."

PROHIBITION LAW ENDED.

South Dakota Held to Have No Present Control over Liquor Dealings.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Nov. 13.—As the prohibition law of the state was enacted to prescribe regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of article 24 of the constitution of the state, entitled "prohibition," it is maintained by several local attorneys and ex-legislators that the law, so dependent upon the constitution, was to all intents repealed by the recent vote which repealed the prohibitive article; in other words, that South Dakota has no law to regulate the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, and can have none until the legislature shall meet in January and enact a license law or make some provision.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Nov. 14.—The republicans surrendered the state to the Bryan electors by about 400 majority but do not give up the state officers, although they are willing to admit that the state ticket ran ahead of the electoral in all the Bryan strongholds.

To Consider Coast Defense.

TALLAHASSE, Fla., Nov. 13.—Gov. Mitchell has addressed a letter to the governors of the northern and western states calling a convention to meet in Tampa, January 20, next, to consider the question of coast defense.

Many Die by Flood.

VIENNA, Nov. 16.—Heavy floods have occurred throughout a large section of Bosnia, and twenty-four persons are reported to have been drowned, while the damage to property has been immense.

More Troops for Cuba.

MADRID, Nov. 13.—The war office is preparing to send 20,000 more troops to Cuba. The steamer Cadiz sailed from Cadiz with a cargo of munitions of war.

TRAIN "WRECKERS."

THE EXPOSURE AND PERIL OF THESE BRAVE MEN.

A Short Talk With an Experienced "Wrecker"—The Intense Strain Upon Nerves and Health.

From the Hawkeye, Burlington, Iowa.

A correspondent of the Mt. Pleasant (Ia.) Daily News and of the Burlington Hawkeye called upon Mr. Edward Tracey, of 1312 Central avenue, Burlington, Ia., and the following interview resulted:

"I was born at Rome, Ia., twenty-six years ago, and lived at that place until 1892, when with several others I went to Florence, Kansas. While there we worked on the Santa Fe Railroad, and had to be out in all sorts of weather. Soon after I went to Kansas City, Kan., where I secured work with the wrecking gang. We were often compelled to stand in water for hours, and it would sometimes be a day and night before we could change our clothing.

"After working at this for a short time I commenced to feel weak and would often have to quit work for a few days. At last I called on a doctor, and after taking medicine for some time without improvement I decided to leave Kansas and go home, thinking that the climate did not agree with me. A few days before I was to start a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I finally yielded to his advice and commenced taking them. In a few days I felt better. When the first box was gone I was able to work again. I have felt the old malady but once since. Then I got at once some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking two boxes was completely well and have not been sick since. I take pleasure in recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the highest terms.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction

Howard Roy Knapp was born in Klemme, Ia,. Aug. 24th. 1894. and died Nov. 18th. 1896, age. two years 2 months and 25 days.

Little Howard's life was sunshine in the home of his parents and after the death of his mother the father's hopes were all centered in his baby. After the mother died the child was taken to his grandmother's at Pearl City, Ill., for a short time, but the father was lonely without the child and brought him here where he was taken care of John Gruetzmacher's family where Mr. Knapp boarded: and into their affections little Howard had grown so strong that it was like loosing one of the family to part with him. The furenal was held in the German M. E. Church, Thursday Nov. 19th at one o'clock, Rev. Haefner conducting the service. Mr. Knapp started with the remains on the 2:20 train for Galena, Ill., where the child will be buried beside its mother.

Charity is a principle and generosity a sentiment.

The I-told-you-so men are just as numerous as in former years.

Few people repent until they begin to pay penalties for what they have done.

Chicago polled about 42,000 more votes than New York city, and that's why Chicago crows.

Bronze is a very fashionable hue nowadays, but brass has not gone entirely out. Read the speeches of our congressmen.

Elmer Graydon, living near English, Ind., has named his infant son Abraham Lincoln Ulysses William McKinley; and a neighbor, John Vaughan, not to be outdone, has named his infant son Thomas Jefferson Andrew Jackson James Monroe William Jennings Bryan. At last accounts both infants were crowing over the results of the election.

Paris has a new fad. It is called the "phosphorescent 5 o'clock." Candles or lamps are not used for illumination. The walls and ceilings, as well as the floor of the room and furniture are all covered with a phosphorescent mixture which absorbs light during the day and becomes luminous at dusk. Even the flowers with which the room is decorated and the pictures which hang on the wall, and the cups and saucers and plates used at these entertainments are subjected to a phosphorescent treatment, so that everything is bathed in a mystic glow. Not to be out of harmony with their surroundings, the ladies bidden to these functions wear "phosphorescent gowns," which gleam with a strange, unearthly glow.

The Indians begin to appreciate the advantages of civilization and education. They are anxious to have their daughters attend school and become educated. They bring more money and the Indian parent is thrifty. The parental eagerness of the red man for the education of his daughter has become such a passion that the government has taken steps to prevent Indian parents from trading off their daughters. If the daughters are returned students from some of the Indian schools they bring a better price, for they know how to do better work. Little headway has been made, however, against the practice, for only last week Polly Clement, daughter of Little Crow of the Santee agency in Nebraska, was sold before she got home.

Several days ago one of the society ladies of Columbus, Ind., was taken with a severe sore throat and her sufferings were such that her friends became very much alarmed over her condition. She was engaged to a young man, and he was hurriedly sent for. When he arrived he kissed her several times. The disease developed into diphtheria of a malignant type, and since then the young man has been attacked by the same disease. Now the state board of health is talking about prohibiting kissing. The serene old gent who is its secretary says: "Although a most dangerous pastime, there seems to be an inherent tendency to indulge in it, and we have little hope of ever being able to do away with it. I may have to recommend a disinfectant. All that would be necessary would be to rinse the teeth well with it and rub it well on the lips. That would insure devotees against the dangers resulting from osculation?" If he ever attempts to enforce a law requiring the participants to scrub mouths after each kiss the board of health will have to get a new secretary.

During the election excitement little attention was paid to an outrage that occurred in Brooklyn, but now in self-defense bachelor mankind will be called on to resent by public agitation and resolutions, and, if need be, by force of arms. Mrs. Lizzie Felton, a buxom widow, weighing 220 pounds, brutally beat, thrashed, and everlastingly tanned the hide of William Leiser, an importunate lover of 110 pounds weight, and a tailor to boot. William loved Lizzie. He was fond of fat meat; he sent her flowers and a testimonial of his love; she licked him. She made him feel like his goose, punched his nose, and then crowed over him. With malice and gloating over her tailor-made crime she told her neighbors and got them to pass resolutions like this: "We, your neighbors, congratulate you over your victory and triumph over the burgomeister of Locust street, and we assure you of our high regard, because you are a woman who knows how to take care of herself." It now becomes necessary for lovers to organize a political party with William Leiser for a leader, to overthrow the tyranny of the sex who refuse to submit peacefully to being made love to.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

WICKS THE WRONG MAN.

He is Not the Man Who Murdered a Companion at Colfax.

DES MOINES, Nov. 20.—The arrival of Marshal Eckles, of Colfax, in the city, in response to a telegram sent him by Chief Johnson, giving the facts of the arrest of a man named John Wicks, answering the description of a tramp supposed to be the murderer of a companion at the little mining town of Oswalt, two weeks ago, practically set at rest all doubt as to the identity of Wicks as the guilty party wanted to answer for the awful crime. Eckles was satisfied that Wicks was the man wanted, but when he was taken to Colfax and confronted by the men who were in the dive at the time of the shooting, they without exception denied that he was the man. Wicks claims he knows who the murderer is, but refuses to tell or where he can be found, and for the refusal was taken to Newton and lodged in the county jail until the case is investigated by the grand jury.

HON. E. W. CURRY DEAD.

Prominent Iowa Politician Passes Away at Des Moines.

DES MOINES, Nov. 19.—Ed. W. Curry, of Leon, chairman of the democratic state central committee died at his room in the Savory of blood poisoning. Mr. Curry was unconscious when death came and suffered no pain. A month ago he was taken ill while in charge of the campaign in Iowa and confined to his rooms in the Savery. It was at first thought he would possibly recover but he grew slowly worse, nervous exhaustion making it impossible for him to rally. For the past week he has been at death's door. A large part of the time he has been unconscious. Mr. Curry was slightly injured while being initiated in the Elks lodge, at Des Moines, and this is said to have been the primary cause of his death.

CRASH AT SIOUX CITY.

First National Bank Crushed by Real Estate Holdings.

SIOUX CITY, Nov. 20.—The First National Bank has closed its doors. The cause of the failure was an overload of real estate. The officers of the bank declare that the bank is perfectly solvent and that dollar for dollar will be paid creditors. The crash was caused by recent heavy withdrawals and difficulty in realizing on assets. Many bad investments have also been made within the past few years and much of the concern's money is in unproductive property. The publication of the reported weakness of a Sioux City bank, to which, however, no direct reference was made, is also said to have precipitated matters. The failure of the First National caused a run on the Sioux City Savings Bank, T. J. Stone being president of both institutions. The officers took advantage of the sixty day law, but late in the day F. B. Ross was appointed receiver for the protection of stockholders and creditors.

HUBBELL'S RAILROAD.

Will Hereafter Act With the Western Passenger Association.

CHICAGO, Nov. 20.—The Des Moines Northern & Western road, which has for a long time been the source of considerable trouble to the roads of the Western Passenger Association by its refusal to become a member of that organization or to conform to the general rules governing the tariffs of the association lines, will hereafter conduct its business under the rules of the association, and will as far as possible avoid giving any trouble to the members of the association. The road will not, however, become a member of the association.

SUED FOR $15,000 DAMAGES.

Practical Joke Causes an Iowa Farmer Considerable Trouble.

GOWRIE, Nov. 23.—Ralph Reynolds, a young man of feeble intellect, was badly frightened some time ago by some men playing the ghost act upon him and has been in the asylum twice since from the effects. Recently Mr. Thomas Reedy, a prominent farmer, was served with papers making him a defendant in a damage suit for $15,000 by the boy's parents.

Case Against Kneebs Weakening.

SIOUX CITY, Nov. 19.—The prosecution in the Kneebs case seems to be rapidly weakening. Nat Brown, the German government's strongest witness, has failed to appear, although long overdue, and, if current report is to be believed, he has decided not to come at all. Except T. W. Cullen, of Columbus, Wis., the rest of the prosecution's witnesses are said to have resolved on the same course, and a free field may be left for the defense.

MAY BE AN ARSON CASE,

DES MOINES, Nov. 21.—There may be a second chapter to the suit of Mrs. Grace E. Smith vs. The Mutual Fire Insurance Company of $1,300 insurance. Mrs. Smith ran a millinery and dressmaking establishment at Afton until January 17, when her store was burned. She had $1,300 insurance in the Mutual company which the officers refused to pay. Now she has commenced suit for the amount. Secretary S. G. Scott of the company says officers have been working on the case for some time and there is a suspicion of arson and fair prospects of placing the guilt where it belongs. No direct charges are made but the suit for insurance will be fought.

FORT OF THE BLUFFS.

Possibility That Captain Hull's Fort Will Be Secured.

DES MOINES, Nov. 21.—There is a possibility that Capt. J. A. T. Hull's military post for Des Moines will be located on the bluffs south of the city as soon as secured. The bill is now pending in congress and Captain Hull has said that he thinks it can be pushed through at the next session. Then the army engineers will select a location and erect buildings and a regiment in the west will be removed to Des Moines.

Elliot Will Not Talk.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Nov. 20.—Elliot, the man arested on suspicion of having killed Hutsonpiller at Omaha, has been subjected to an examination. He had stated that he hed only five dollars, but over sixty dollars was found concealed about his person. Stains resembling blood were found on his clothes. He still refuses to talk about the charges against him.

Pastor Benedict Bound Over.

LARRABEE, Nov. 23.—Rev. E. L. Benedict appeared before Justice Alexander and waived examination. The justice bound him over to the next grand jury under a bond of $4,000, which was quickly signed. So strong is public sympathy with the prisoner that fifty good, substantial names could have been secured had it been necessary.

Creston Roller Mills Burned.

CRESTON, Nov. 20.—Fire destroyed the Creston Roller mills, valued at from $15,000 to $20,000, insured for $1,000. The building was the property of W. W. Bradford. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Spencer Man Suicides.

SPENCER, Nov. 23.—Dave Hilton, a carpenter by trade, committed suicide by hanging himself to a bed post at the Commercial hotel.

BREVITIES.

Special from Des Moines: Thomas Houghton, janitor at the Equitable building, fell out of a window on the second floor and was badly injured. Houghton has been working at the Equitable building two years. About a year ago he was caught in the elevator and barely escaped death. He was so badly injured that he was laid up a long time. A few days ago he was washing one of the windows on the second floor on the north side of the building. While washing the outside he lost his hold on the window and fell to the ground in the alley. The force of the fall was partially broken by some of the alley wires, but his left ankle and left wrist were broken.

A few days ago Mrs. Fred Reinfeldt, a farmer's wife living near Manning, came near meeting a terrible death. As it is she is in a precarious condition, the result of being hooked by a vicious cow. She received terrible injuries, the abdomen being torn open for fourteen inches. It is thought she may recover.

Jerry Pitman, a wealthy old settler of Jefferson, fell dead from heart failure.

Lawrence, a son of Roger McPoland, of Dubuque, ten years old, died of lockjaw, caused by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge, which blew off two of his fingers. He had traded a slate pencil for it with a school mate, and coming home struck it with a hammer.

Fort Dodge special: Charles Darrah, a Minneapolis & St. Louis locomotive fireman, slipped while jumping off a train and had both legs cut off. He is in a most critical condition.

The editor of the Creston Advertiser, S. A. Brewster, has, it is understood, been booked for the editorship of the new silver paper at Des Moines, provided the new silver paper succeeds in getting beyond the projected point and becomes really and truly a fact.

L. M. Van Auken, ex-county auditor of Cerro Gordo county, who was found guilty of altering the records of the board of supervisors and sentenced to six months in the penitentiary, has been granted a full pardon by Gov. Drake. He did not serve a day.

Glass bottles were made in Brooklyn in 1754.

ALL OVER THE WORLD

JUDGE PARKER DEAD.

Had Sentenced 200 Criminals to the Gallows During His Life.

FORT SMITH, Ark., Nov. 19.—Isaac C. Parker, the famous "hanging judge" of Arkansas, died at his home in this city on the 17th. Not, perhaps, since the time of Jeffreys, the historic "hanging judge" of the reign of James II, and his somewhat less noted successor, Judge Page, has there been so remorseless a trial judge on the bench. He will have as distinguished a niche in the history of the American judiciary as have the two above named in England, and the spirit of his implacable career will haunt the criminally disposed in this section of the country long after his mortal remains have been turned into dust. During his career of 20 years as judge he had sentenced not less than 200 prisoners to the gallows.

OUTRAGE ON NEGROES.

Kentucky Mob Fires Into a Party of Loggers.

PADUCAH, Ky., Nov, 18.—Four negroes were seriously wounded and five others sprinkled with buckshot by a mob of white men at Altoona, fifteen miles from here, on the Tennessee river. Fifteen negroes were engaged in cutting timber for the Standard Oil Company. They had been ordered to leave, being told that no negroes were allowed to stop there. The negroes were sitting around an old smokehouse when a mob of fifty men swooped down upon them and began firing. Some of the negroes ran into the woods and others sought shelter in the house with the foreman. The mob then started to burn the house, but the foreman sued for peace and the negroes were given twenty-five minutes in which to leave.

A QUEER CRAFT.

Illinois Man Starts for Cuba in a Singular Vessel.

CAIRO, Ill., Nov. 20.—Anton Schlosser, a stonecutter of this city, believes that divine power has ordered him to go to Cuba, and he has left for that troubled isle. For many weeks he has been engaged in constructing a unique craft, which was rolled from his shop on the same wheels by which it is propelled in the water. The boat is about fifteen feet long, and is lined with galvanized iron. The wheels are about four feet in diameter, and he turns them by foot-power. The craft left here for the south and was traveling at the rate of ten miles an hour when it disappeared from view.

ALMOST A LYNCHING.

Negroes Who Held Up Mr. Metzner Taken to Safe Jails.

HENDERSON, Ky., Nov. 17.—All of the seven colored men implicated in the shooting of Mr. Metzner have been captured. The masked men entered the grocery store of Lang & Metzner flourishing weapons and ordered Mr. Metzner to give up all he had. Although Metzner threw up his hands he was riddled with bullets. A lynching was expected, but three of the negroes were taken off clandestinely to Pineville and four to Hopkinsville, so that there is no longer any apprehension of violence.

KING OSCAR'S GRACEFUL ACT.

Erects a Monument to Americans Who Perished in His Country.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—King Oscar II of Sweden and Norway has given further evidence of his kindly feelings toward Americans by erecting a granite monument on the spot where Mr. and Mrs. Daniel W. Youmans of New York City met their death on July 4 last. The circumstances of King Oscar's graceful act are reported to the state department, with photographs of the monument erected by him. The secretary of state has made suitable acknowledment and has directed that our minister convey to the minister of foreign affairs a suitable expression on behalf of the secretary of state.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

Only Cutlery Steel Manufactory in the Nation Going Up.

CLEVELAND, Nov, 18.—The Cleveland Steel Company of this city, owned by the Rockefellers, is erecting a big crucible steel plant and will manufacture that article on a large scale. It will be the only concern of its kind in the country. All crucible steel which is used in the manufacture of cutlery, fine tools, etc., is now imported from Sweden.

Hog Cholera Very Prevalent.

CINCINATTI, Nov. 19.—Hog cholera prevails in some sections of Ohio. Kentucky and Indiana, so that the Union Stockyards here have established a strict quarantine.

WEYLER IS ACTIVE.

He is Said to Be Carrying Everything Before Him in Pinar del Rio.

HAVANA, Nov. 23.—Gen. Weyler is moving in a southerly direction toward the coast of Pinar del Rio, after taking possession of the mountain passes. These entrances to the mountains of Pinar del Rio were abandoned by the insurgents. The Cubans, it is said, made no resistance whatever at these points. The Spanish swept before them everything thing that would have a tendency to aid the Cubans in carrying on their warfare, destroying factories and dwellings and even the farm products found on the different plantations in this section of Pinar del Rio. A large number of documents, etc., abandoned by Gen. Maceo, have been captured by the Spanish forces.

WHOLESALE MURDER CHARGED

Andrew J. Shute Under Arrest on Suspicion of a Terrible Crime.

DENVER, Nov. 18.—Andrew J. Shute, who was supposed to be the sole survivor of a family that was drowned in Smith's Lake, near this city, is now in jail charged with the murder of his wife and four children, who were drowned on that occasion. The alleged accident occurred several weeks ago, and the affair created a sensation in Swedish circles, where Shute held a high office and was esteemed a model parent. It now develops that he maintained another establishment in high style in a downtown block, and, according to the woman's testimony, Shute taught her to swim at Smith's Lake, where, as Shute swore, he failed to save any of his family because he could not swim. The woman in question is under arrest.

NORTHWESTERN FLOODS.

Seattle Still Has Difficulty in Securing Communication by Railway.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 19.—In some sections of the flooded districts the Skagit and Snohomish rivers are slowly receding. However they have not fallen enough to give material relief and the smaller rivers to the south of this city, in King county, are still rising, entailing great loss to private property. Much of the wheat crop, for which Skagit river bottoms are famous, has been irreparably damaged and an immense quantity of hay has been washed down the river into Puget Sound. From the northern counties come reports of great destruction to stock, hundreds of cattle, sheep and hogs having been drowned.

BUYING AMERICAN RAILS.

Carnegie Company Filling Heavy Orders From the Orient

BRADDOCK, Pa., Nov. 18.—Li Hung Chang has sent Andrew Carnegie an order for 10,000 tons of steel rails. When the Edgar Thompson plant resumed operations it started to roll these rails. The company also received a big order from Japan. It is for 5,000 tons of T rails, which are to be used in level country districts for light traffic. It is said the freight rates to the Pacific would be more than the cost of the order, and for this reason they will be sent around by water from New York.

Oklahoma Prairie Fires.

GUTHRIE, Okla., Nov. 23.—Prairie fires have done extensive damage in northeastern Lincoln and Payne counties, destroying many thousands of acres of pasture, causing loss of hay, corn and buildings to many farmers, and fatally burning two persons.

Sneezed and Broke His Neck.

BOSTON, Ind., Nov. 18.—Jacob Gibson, to play a joke upon a peddler named Martin Silver, sprinkled ground pepper in his victim's mustache, which caused Silver to sneeze so violently as to dislocate his neck. Physicians doubt Silver's recovery. Gibson is under arrest.

LEGALIZE MEXICAN DOLLARS.

Kansas Populist Legislators Project a Sensational Scheme.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 21.—One of the laws the new populist legislature proposes to enact this winter is a bill making Mexican silver dollars a legal tender in Kansas. This scheme is proposed by S. S. King, one of the most prominent candidates for United States senator. Populist lawyers and a few republican attorneys believe that while such coins would not make a legal tender for the payment of prior obligations they might possibly be made to apply to future debts.

American Exports to Austria.

DETROIT, Nov. 23.—A. A. Goodrich & Co. have received an order for 2,000 tons of charcoal pig iron for Buda Pesth, Austria. The iron is required for the manufacture of car wheels. The order is the largest ever received for export by an American firm.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION.

"When my grandfather died his will provided that his two orphan nieces, Flora and myself, should be brought up alike on the family estate and receive the same education. He also arranged that my Aunt Marcia should remain with me. He never loved me, but he was a just man. Had he known the torturing life before me, I doubt not he would have made better provision for the child of his eldest son. My Aunt Pamelia—but, no, I will not describe her. The bitterness of childish feelings come back through all these years. Let her actions tell you how hard and pitiless she could be. She disliked me thoroughly. She hated my mother for coming into the family without a fortune to add to its grandeur, and daily and hourly I was made to feel the inferiority of my position to that of her darling Flora, whose comfortable income lay accumulating in the banks. Childhood is light-hearted and elastic, so I did not feel this persecution as my helpless Aunt Marica did. Often have I wondered to see her with flashing eyes tearing around our humble little room in the upper story, like a wild beast in its fury, vowing vengeance with a terrible earnestness that frightened me even then. She loved me so much that every slight to me was a thousand-fold worse than open insult to herself. It was a hard life, and grew worse as I advanced toward maidenhood. It was very injudicious, but natural, that Aunt Marica should teach me to look forward to some time in the future, when I should triumph over my persecutors. How I remember her gloating over my fair face as a means of lifting us away from our woeful life! And how she encouraged my efforts in my studies, glorying in my proficiency above Flora, whose abundant pleasures diverted her attention.

At length a drawing master came to teach us. It was your father, Walter, and with his coming dawned a new existence for me. He penetrated the thin veil of affectation that hid Flora's selfish, frivolous heart, and turned away the moment his duties were over. It was not so with me; he lingered by my side after our pencils had been laid away. He joined me in my rambles. He shared every pleasant hour I knew. He was so kind I thought I could never repay him. Perhaps out of gratitude love was born; but I loved him as a true, warm-hearted woman loves but once in a lifetime. No wonder what is left of me is called cold and icy. I thought earth held no brighter joy when he whispered his declaration of love. My aunt had watched us with lynx-eyed vigilance. She said only that I must keep it secret when I went to her with my new-found happiness.

"At that time the house was thronged with company, among whom was the Hon. Mr. Conmore, then the presumptive Lord Collinwood, and his brother Arthur. Regard for appearances prevented my Aunt Pamelia from following her wishes and excluding me from the drawing-rooms, and so it happened Arthur Conmore became interested in me, and showed a flattering preference for my society. I told it to my Aunt Marcia, with a girl's foolish pride of conquest, but said lightly my duty to Paul required I should repulse him. My aunt's eyes sparkled. I will not stay to tell how she worked upon my vanity and pride, my evil, revengeful feelings, till I had promised to bring Arthur Conmore to my feet, and keep him there until she gave me leave to dismiss him. All I thought about was to show Flora I was not so insignificant as she thought. Poor, giddy moth, I was fluttering around the candle of my destruction. The first I knew I was literally engaged to two persons. My aunt hushed my alarm and promised to bring me safely out of the difficulty. Meanwhile my ire was kept aflame by the supercilious speeches of Flora, who sneeringly told me one day that if Arthur Conmore would condescend to marry me she would persuade his brother, to whom she was engaged, to allow us, when he became Lord Collinwood, enough income to keep us from starvation. Need I explain how such talk operated on the mind of a sensitive, high-spirited girl, brought up as I had been? Alas, I was ready to join with my aunt, and long for some misfortune to come to place her beneath my feet. I still continued to see Paul, and loved him even more passionately than at first. He thought my excuses for my frequent rides with Mr. Conmore natural enough, well knowing how little I was my own mistress, and indeed was often kept away from me himself by the Hon. Mr. Conmore, who had taken a great fancy to him after seeing what an excellent sportsman he was, and they were often away after game. My Aunt Marcia watched everything with the alert eye of love and the unceasing vigilance of hate. She came to me one day repeating a conversation she had overheard between my Aunt Pamelia and Flora. It nearly maddened me. I vowed if ever vengeance lay in my way I would take it. Then she said with stern calmness, 'O, I can see now how her eye burned, smothering the fierce fire within!' and Lady Annabel shuddered.

"'Annabel,' said she, 'it lies in your own grasp now—the complete triumph of yourself, the utter defeat of your insolent, haughty relatives, who broke the heart of your sweet mother, and, if they could, would break yours too.'

"'Tell me what it is,' I demanded fiercely.

"'Only this,' replied she—'you have unbounded influence over Paul Kirkland. He goes often to shoot on the cliff that overhangs the lake, and he who is soon to be Lord Collinwood always accompanies. Bid him go tomorrow; there shall be a duck on the water. Tell him to say, "Come, Conmore, step upon the rock and let us see how close you can fire!" Only that, Eleanor, and all your wishes will be accomplished.'

"Oh, my children, my children, here was my sin. I asked her not a word; I meant to shut out the responsibility of knowing what were her intentions. I never dreamed they were so terrible, but I knew it was something wrong. I knew it, I knew it, but I would not harken to the voice of conscience. I went straight to Paul, while the fever of anger glowed in my veins. Oh, pity my undying remorse! Walter, his son, and Eleanor, child of mine! I used his love for me to ruin him forever. I gave him the long-refused kiss; I let him clasp my hand in his, and then asked my boon—to decoy his noble friend to the rock upon the cliff, and challenge him to fire. Paul seemed to wonder, but with his unbounded confidence in me he refused to question me—said something about mistrusting I wanted to win a wager, and promised readily. We parted, Paul and I, gaily and lovingly. Oh, Heaven, that parting—it was for life! Was it for eternity also?"

CHAPTER XV.

HE laid her head back, fainting and convulsed for breath. Eleanor sprang for the cordial, and Walter held the glass to her lips. The spasm passed, and both besought her to refrain from further recital, but, persisting, she continued:

"I parted from Paul and from peace of mind forever. The next day I heard her betrothed give Flora a light kiss, and say in his cheery voice, 'I'm off for a little sport with Kirkland on the cliff.' With a vague, uneasy foreboding, I went about my usual routine, startled by a strange fear to find my aunt had been absent since into the midnight. Three hours after, and I heard a sudden outcry on the lawn. I flew to the window. There was a crowd of servants around a hastily improvised litter. Horror-stricken, I ran down the stairs, passing Flora in the hall.

"Just Heaven! it was Mr. Conmore's bruised and mangled corpse. I heard old Roger, the gardner, explaining to the frightened crowd. 'I was gathering herbs,' said he, 'and I see the whole. Miss Marcia sent for me. I see the honorable gentleman step onto the rock with his gun raised, when down came the rock, tearing along and striking on those ugly rocks below. I knew he must be dead before I got to him. It's strange; I've been on the rock many a time, and it was as firm as it could be; but I s'pose that last rain loosened it somewhat. Oh, how white and dead like poor Master Kirkland was when he got to him! "Dead, dead!" said he, and putting his hands to his head he fell back in a dead faint himself. They've carried him to his boarding-house.'

"I did not wait to hear Flora's shrieks, but crept back to my room. There sat my Aunt Marcia, singing softly a war hymn.

"'Are you crazy?' cried I. 'Do you know what has happened?'

"'I know that Arthur Conmore, to whom you are engaged, will be Collinwood soon,' answered she exultingly.

"I flung myself upon the floor in the abandonment of terror from the guilty light that burst upon me. 'Aunt, aunt,' cried I, 'are you, and I, and Paul, his murderers?'

"She laughed. Strange that I did not see then it was a maniac's glee!

"'Annabel,' said she, 'you must obey me now, or be lost. I shall go to Paul Kirkland and tell him you wish to see him no more—that you are engaged to another. You must write it for me to carry to him.'

"'Give up Paul?' cried I. 'Never—never?'

"'Annabel,' said she, sternly, 'all my life I have worked for this; your weak sentiments shall not balk me now. Think of your murdered mother—of your own hard lot—of the insults and indignities heaped upon us—and be strong as an avenger.'

"'I cannot live without Paul,' moaned I.

"Fool!' answered she, between her clenched teeth, 'you shall! Do you not see there is no chance for such a union? He believes you guilty of murder this minute. Do you think there would be any peace for you as his wife? I tell you you would be wretched yourself, and drag him with you into the gulf of misery.'

"It was a new thought, and it went home to my heart like a poisoned arrow. I writhed there upon the floor in the agony of my grief. She looked on pitilessly, for her hate was so fierce and strong it o'ermastered the tenderness of love. Then she held up the only hope that was left—the glittering coronet—the noble name of Lady Collinwood. Weary and hopeless in my despair, I let her have her way. Congratulating myself that the worst he thought of me, the more hope there was for his future happiness, I wrote my note to Paul. My aunt came back telling me he sent only this word to me—that he should fly from the country, and if he could, escape from remembrance of hope and me. I know now by his narrative, how he changed his name, and in India married a good young girl, who loved him without his seeking her favor, but died when her son was born—how he was ship-wrecked on the desolate island, and in the inscrutable ways of Providence loved and educated my lost daughter. For me, I married Lord Collinwood, for his father died scarcely a month after his eldest son. He was a noble creature and a tender husband, but he had a heavy grief to bear, for he knew the icy veil that lay on my heart. I would not be a hypocrite—I could not return his caresses. I loathed myself when I endured them passively; I hated myself as I came to gain a name for exemplary rectitude, which the shrinking heart within me knew to be a whited sepulchre. O, heavens—the sufferings I have endured, and kept a smiling calm outside! I had not even the poor consolation of my aunt's sympathy. The very day after my marriage she gave unmistakable signs of insanity, and she died a raving maniac. My husband died too, and, horrible as it may seem, it was an intense relief to be free from the need of dissembling. I admired, respected, reverenced him, and was thankful that he was taken from so false and unworthy a partner—from so hollow and loveless a life.

"In after years I grew to ponder upon the fate of Paul, until it grew to be a morbid craving to make some atonement to him or his children, if he had them. I caused numerous secret inquiries, and found at last that he had sailed for India. To India—on pretext of settling some property of my husband's there—I went in my brother-in-law's ship—the only son left of the hapless family—the present Lord Collinwood, I mean. I found no trace of Paul beyond his arrival and departure with a son.

The Best Mother.

In a herdic the other day a manly little fellow got up from his seat by the door and moved down to the other end to make place for a one-legged gentleman whose crutch would have made havoc of dainty dresses. "Thank you, my son," said the old fellow. "You have a good mother." "Best ever was," was the smiling response of the little fellow, as he raised his hat and then took the fare to put in the box. That was a boy in a thousand, and his stockings were darned at the knee and the hem let out of his short knee-pants, so that riches had nothing to do with it. One must think sometimes, when riding in public conveyances, that "good mothers" are a scarce article, or "better boys," boys with improved manners, would be more frequently met with.—Washington Star.

A "Tallow Diplomat."

An Englishman and an American girl at a state ball were talking over some of the people present when the former said: "That is Lord B. who has just passed. Have you met him?" "Yes," was the answer, "and I thought him extremely dull." "You surprise me. He is one of the most brilliant lights of our service." "Really?" returned the American girl. "Then it is my turn to be surprised. His light flickered so when he talked with me that I set him down as one of your tallow diplomats."

IOWA PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

DES MOINES, Nov. 23.—A correspondent at Bristow, Iowa, asks, "Can an improvement be patented without the consent of the owner of the original patent?" We answer yes; improvements are always in order and sometimes more valuable than the originals. And one at Lorimer asks "Is a patent taxable?" We answer yes, in some foreign countries, but not in the United States.

Patents have been allowed but not yet issued as follows: To C. C. Calhoun, of Windsor, Mo., for an automatic brake for wagons; To L. Avery, of Montaur, Iowa, (recently deceased) for a hay rake and loader: to Wm. Morley, of Fontanelle, for a band cutter and feeder; to J. A. Drake, of Brooklyn, for an anti-freezing stock waterer; to W. J. Benning, of Boone, for a current motor: to A. T. Dowden, of Prairie City (2) for a potato cutter and a sprocket chain specially adapted for his potato harvester.

PATRIOTISM IN SPAIN.

Manifested by an Eager Desire to Subscribe to the New Internal Loan.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Daily News publishes a dispatch from Paris detailing a patriotic outburst in Spain—an eager desire to subscribe to the new internal loan issued by the government. Women are selling their jewelry in order to raise money to help the government, while the bishops are promising to devote the gold and silver plate belonging to the church to the same object. Brokers in Madrid have undertaken to dispose of scrip to the amount of $4,000,000. So great is the popular desire to take part of the loan that the banks of Spain and Barcelona were opened Sunday in order to receive subscriptions.

THIS COUNTRY ALL RIGHT.

Senor Canovas Says Spain is Fully Satisfied With the American Policy.

PARIS, Nov. 20.—Le Journal publishes a report of an interview with Senor Canovas del Castillo, prime minister of Spain, in which he says that the relations between the United States and Spain are excellent. The United States government, the premier says, has always observed a correct attitude, and he does not believe it will change its policy for the sake of the Cuban negroes and adventurers. If however, the United States should do so, Spain would cause her rights to be respected. While he is in power Senor Canovas is reported as saying that he will make no concessions to rebels, nor will he show the weakness of drawing back before any body. Spain, the premier added, regards the Cuban question as one of international politics.

HELD IN GERMANY.

Kaiser's Minions Make Trouble for a Naturalized American.

CINCINNATTI, Nov. 20.—Lucas Reiner of Covington, Ky., is soon to become an object of international attention. He was born in Germany, but came to the United States at the age of 14, and has for several years been a naturalized citizen. Recently, on his way to South Africa, he stopped at Schramberg, Germany, and on Nov. 3 wrote to his cousin in Covington, saying the German authorities were trying to force him into the army. He begs his friends to lay the matter before the secretary of state, and says he will appeal to the United States consul at Stuttgart. His relatives will appeal to Secretary Olney.

STEAMER MEMPHIS WRECKED.

Ten of Her Crew Lose Their Lives on the Irish Coast.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The British steamer Memphis, Captain Wilson, which sailed for Montreal November 4 for Bristol, was wrecked in Dunlough Bay, near Milzen Head, on the south coast of Ireland, and ten of those on board of her were drowned.

WILL NOT GO SOUTH.

Fleet of War Ships to Maneuver in Hampton Roads.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—Admiral Bunce's fine fleet of war vessels will be kept this winter, as it was last, away from Cuban waters. The fleet will not go south, stopping at Venezuelan ports, as was at one time talked of, but will rendezvous at Hampton Roads and enter upon a winter's program of practice and drills and open sea evolutions in that vicinity.

Coal Mine Burning Since 1884.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 20.—State Mine Inspector Hazeltine has asked Attorney General Monnett for instructions as to his statutory powers in a peculiar case. A coal mine at Straitsville, fired during the miners' strike of 1884, has been burning all these years. The owner has made no effort to put the fire out. It has consumed coal under large territory, and surface real estate, well improved, is about to fall in. Other mines are also in danger of catching fire. The attorney general advised him to prosecute the owner if he does not take steps at once to put the fire out

SCHOOLS TO BE NATIONAL.

Parochial Institutions are to Disappear in Manitoba.

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 16.—The organ of the Greenway government gives the terms of the parchial school question settlement as follows: "All schools are to be national, under provincial control and subject to the same regulations and inspections. The same text books will be used, and all teachers will be properly qualified by passing the provincial examinations and taking the prescribed normal school course. School work of purely secular character will occupy the school day, except the last half hour, when the representatives of any denomination will be allowed to come in and instruct the children belonging to their own denomination, provided the parents are willing to have them remain. In cases where the people decide not to have this religious instruction, the regular school work will go on till the close of the school hour." The principle of local option is recognized throughout. The proviso that is intended to make the schools satisfactory to the minority is that districts having an average attendance of twenty-five Roman Catholic children shall be entitled to have a teacher of their own denomination, who must be fully qualified, according to provincial or national school standards. In districts where the children speak French wholly, they are to have a teacher speaking both French and English, so that they will learn English as rapidly as possible. The readers used in such schools will be bi-lingual, so that the children will grow up from the first accustomed to English.

NO DANGER OF WAR.

Cuban Consul General Not Frightened at Spain.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, consul general of the United States to Cuba, while not denying the possibility of war with Spain, has expressed the opinion that the reports that open rupture was imminent and that consequent preparations for trouble were being made by both countries might be generally exaggerated. He said he had no knowledge of immediate danger of hostility, although, of course, there is great feeling among some Spaniards against this country. They think that without filibustering and comfort from this country the rebellion might easily be suppressed. He said he had no information as to whether the Spanish were preparing for war, but they might be making extensive military preparations without aiming them particularly at the United States, in view of the trouble they are having in both Cuba and the Philippine Islands.

LYNCHED BY A MOB.

Indiana Brute Riddled With Bullets for an Awful Crime.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Nov. 18.—Carbon, a mining village in Pike county, was the scene of a tragedy. Fred Williams called at the home of Mrs. Palm, who was ill, and attempted to assault her. Her entreaties proved of avail just as the woman's 12-year-old daughter entered the room. Williams transferred his attempts to the child and accomplished his purpose. As soon as Williams escaped an alarm was given and twenty or more miners armed themselves and began the chase. Williams was overtaken and shot dead while trying to escape. His victim may die.

Rev. J. C. Hull Pleads Guilty.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 21.—The trial of Rev. James C. Hull for the attempted poisoning of his wife came to a sensational end. Confronted by overwhelming proof of his guilt in the form of a letter which he had written, Hull broke down completely, changed his plea to guilty, and was sentenced to six years in the penitentiary.

John R. Gentry Sold for $19,000.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Before the largest crowd ever seen at a horse sale in this country, and after a most sensational auction, John R. Gentry, the champion harness horse of the world, passed into the hands of Lewis G. Tewksbury, of New York, for $19,000, at Madison Square Garden. Mr. Tewksbury is also the owner of Robert J., Mascot, and other speedy horses.

Prominent German Dead.

BERLIN, Nov. 21.—Prince Otho von Stillberg-Wernigerode, head of his house, president of the Prussian diet, and general of the Prussian cavalry, is dead, aged 59.

ARMENIAN BISHOP TO DIE.

Sentenced to be Executed Because of the Late Riots in Constantinople.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 20.—The Turkish special tribunal has sentenced the Armenian bishop at Hassekin to death. He was condemned because, during the late riots in Constantinople he had a loaded gun in his house. The bishop was absent from home at the time, and upon this ground an appeal was taken against the judgment of the special tribunal, but the court of appeals has confirmed the sentence imposed by the tribunal.

The Swem Gas Light Co., of Waterloo, has put in their generators for W. C. Schuler's store and Henry Rousch's hotel and are putting in an outfit for Mrs. C. S. Collins. The generators work automaticly and with the Walsbach burner gives the best lsght we ever saw. We should prefer it to electric light for business places or dwelling hnuses. After the plant is in the expense is far below the cost of kerosene. It will be the popular light.

The Young People's Societies of Clarion have issued a resolution asking that the voters of Wright county not sign a petition that is being circulated for the purpose of getting the required 60 per cent. of signatures that a saloon may be opened at that place. A counter petition with 36 per cent. of voters' signatures will kill the other petition.

Why wouldn't it be a good scheme for every farmer to have his name painted on his barn or some building on his premises. A business man in an exchange says: I wish that every farmer in the connty would have his name painted on his barn. Now I drove out about eight miles yesterday, and today I traced out the route on the map and I find I passed places of half dozen friends and customers with whom I would liked to have stopped and spoken to, but didn't know where they lived. The farmer in turn wonders why the man he patronizes and knows so well in town, can not stop and shake hands in the country. Paint your name on the barn and the world will grow more social.

The canes of the raspberry that have grown this season are the ones that will produce the fruit next year.

The current never fruits on young wood; generally the wood from two to four years old is what produces the fruit.

The best covering for the raspberry and blackberry is fresh earth; if covered with anything else it will make a harber for mice.

Each and every one should encourage the raising and introduction of new fruits of all leading kinds, and we should also be slow to admit anything as new that cannot be satisfactorily traced to the seed.

The barrel is the most convenient package for shipping dressed poultry to market.

There should be a law forbidding the shipment of fowls in coops in which they can not stand upright.

The chickens will appreciate a few crisp, succulent roots during the winter months.

Fowls intended for market should be killed by cutting in the roof of the mouth and allowed to bleed. The skin should not be broken.

When the feed is thrown down in a mass one or two old hens usually fight the others off and get more than their fair share. The result is that the old hens get more food than is good for them and become fat and lazy, while the others get too little. If the food is scattered al' have a fair chance.

A THANKSGIVING SKETCH.

THERE was a sad heart in the low-storied, dark little house that stood humbly by the roadside under some tall elms. Small as her house was, old Mrs. Robb found it too large for herself alone; she only needed the kitchen and a tiny bedroom that led out of it, and there still remained the best room and a bedroom, with the low garret overhead. There had been a time, after she was left alone, when Mrs. Robb could help those who were poorer than herself. She owned a pig, and was strong enough not only to do a woman's work inside her house, but also a man's work outside in her piece of garden ground. At last sickness and age had come hand in hand, those two relentless enemies of the poor, and together they had wasted her strength and substance. She had always been looked up to by her neighbors as being independent, but now she was left, lame-footed and lame-handed, with a debt to carry and her bare land, and the house ill-provisioned to stand the siege of time. For a while she managed to get on, but at last it began to be whispered about that it was no use for any one to be so proud; it was easier for the whole town to care for her than for a few neighbors, and she had better go to the poorhouse before winter, and be done with it. At this terrible suggestion her brave heart seemed to stand still. The people whom she cared most for happened to be poor, and she could no longer go into their households to make herself of use. The very elms overhead seemed to say "No" as they groaned in the late autumn winds, and there was something appealing even to strange passers-by in the look of the little gray house, with Mrs. Robb's pale, worried face at the window.

Anniversaries are days to make other people happy in, but sometimes when they come they seem to be full of shadows, and the power of giving joy to others, that inalienable right which ought to lighten the saddest heart, the most indifferent sympathy, sometimes even this seems to be withdrawn. So poor old Mary Ann Robb sat at her window on the afternoon before Thanksgiving and felt herself to be poor and sorrowful indeed. Across the frozen road she looked eastward over a great stretch of cold meadow-land, brown and windswept and crossed by icy ditches. It seemed to her as if in all the troubles that she had known and carried before this, there had always been some hope to hold, as if she had never looked poverty full in the face and seen its cold and pitiless look before. She looked anxiously down the road, with a horrible shrinking and dread at the thought of being asked, out of pity, to join in some Thanksgiving feast, but there was nobody coming with gifts in hand. Once she had been full of love for such days, whether at home or abroad, but something had chilled her very heart now, poor old woman.

Her nearest neighbor had been foremost of those who wished her to go to the town-farm, and he had said more than once that it was the only sensible thing. But John Mander was waiting patiently to get her tiny farm into his own hands. He had advanced some money upon it in her extremity, and pretended that there was still a debt, after he had cleared her wood lot to pay himeelf back. He would plow over the graves in the field-corner and fell the great elms, and waited for his poor prey like a spider. He had often reproached her for being too generous to worthless people in the past and coming to be a charge to others now. Oh, if she could only die in her own house and not suffer the pain of homelessness and dependence!

It was just at sunset, and as she looked out hopelessly across the gray fields, there was a sudden gleam of light far away on the low hills beyond, the clouds opened in the west and let the sunshine through. One lovely gleam shot swift as an arrow and brightened a far cold hillside where it fell, and at the same moment a sudden gleam of hope brightened the winter landscape of her heart.

"There was Johnny Harris," said Mary Ann, softly. "He was a soldier's son, left an orphan and distressed. Old John Mander scolded, but I couldn't see the poor boy want. I kep' him that year after he got hurt, spite o' what anybody said, an' he helped me what little he could. He said I was the only mother he'd ever had. 'I'm goin' out West, Mother Robb,' says he. 'I shan't come back till I get rich,' an' then he'd look at me an' laugh, so pleasant an' boyish. He wa'n't one that liked to write. I don't think he was doin' very well when I heard—there, it's years ago now. I always thought if he got sick or anything, I should have a good home for him. There was Ezra Blake, the deaf one, too—he won't have any place to come to—"

The light faded out of doors, and again Mrs. Robb's troubles stood before her. Yet it was not so dark as it had been in her sad heart. She still sat by the window, hoping now, in spite of herself, instead of fearing; and a curious feeling of nearness and expectancy made her feel not so much light-hearted as light-headed.

"I feel just as if somethin' was goin' to happen," she said. "Poor Johnny Harris, perhaps he's thinkin' o' me, if he's alive."

It was dark now out of doors, and there were tiny clicks against the window. It was beginning to snow, and the great elms creaked in the rising wind overhead.

A dead limb of one of the old trees had fallen that autumn, and poor firewood as it had been, it was Mrs. Robb's own, and she had burnt it most thankfully. There was only a small armful left, but at least she could have the luxury of a fire. She had a feeling that it was her last night at home, and with strange recklessness she began to fill the stove as she used to do in better days.

"I'll get me good an' warm," she said, still talking to herself, as lonely people do, "an' I'll go to bed early. It's comin' on to storm." The snow clicked faster and faster against the window, and she sat alone thinking in the dark.

"There's lots o' folks I love," she said once. "They'd be sorry I ain't got nobody to come an' no supper the night afore Thanksgivin'. I'm dreadful glad they don't know." And she drew a little nearer to the fire, and laid her head back drowsily in the old rocking-chair.

It seemed only a moment before there was a loud knocking, and somebody lifted the latch of the door. The fire shone bright through the front of the old stove and made a little light in the room, but Mary Ann Robb waked up frightened and bewildered.

"Who's there?" she called, as she found her crutch and went to the door. She was conscious of only her one great fear. "They've come to take me to the poorhouse!" she said, and burst into tears.

There was a tall man, not John Mander, who seemed to fill the narrow doorway.

"Come, let me in!" he said gayly. "It's a cold night. You didn't expect me, did you, Mother Robb?"

"Dear me! What is it?" she faltered, stepping back as he came in and dropping her crutch. "Be I dreamin'? I was a-dreamin' about— Oh there What was I a-sayin'? 'Tain't true! No I've made some kind of a mistake.' Yes, this was the man who kept the poorhouse, and she would go without complaint; they might have given her notice, but she must not fret.

"Sit down, sir," she said, turning toward him with touching patience. "You'll have to give me a little time. If I'd been notified I wouldn't have kept you waiting a minute this cold night." It was not the keeper. The man by the door took one step forward and put his arm round her and kissed her.

"What are you talkin' about?" said John Harris. "You ain't goin' to make me feel like a stranger. I've come all the way from Dakota to spend Thanksgivin'. There's all sorts o' things out here in the wagon, an' a man to help get 'em in. Why—don't you cry so Mother Robb. I thought you'd have a great laugh if I come an' surprised you Don't you remember I said I should?"

It was John Harris indeed. The poor soul could say nothing. She felt now as if her heart was going to break with joy. He left her in the rocking-chair and came and went in his old bonny way, bringing in his store of gifts and provisions. It was better than any dream. He laughed and talked and went out to send the man to bring a wagonful of wood from John Mander's, and came in himself laden with pieces of the nearest fence to keep the fire going in the meantime. They must cook the steak for supper right away; they must find the package of tea among all the other bundles; they must get good fires started in both the bedrooms. Why, Mother Robb didn't seem to be ready for company from out West! The great cheerful fellow hurried about the tiny house, and the little, old woman limped after him, forgetting everything but hospitality. Had not she a house for John to come to? Were not her old chairs and tables in their places still? And he remembered everything and kissed her as they stood before the fire as if she were a girl.

"DON'T YOU CRY SO!"

He had found plenty of hard times, but luck had come at last. He had struck luck, and this was the end of a great year.

"No, I couldn't seem to write letters; no use to complain o' the worst, an' I wanted to tell you the best when I came"; and he told it while she cooked the supper. "No, I wa'n't goin' to write no foolish letters," John repeated. He was afraid he should cry himself when he found out how bad things had been; and they sat down to supper together, just as they used to when he was a homeless orphan boy, whom nobody else wanted in winter weather while he was crippled and could not work. She could not be kinder now than she was then but she looked so poor and old! He saw her taste her cup of tea and set it down again, with a trembling hand and a look at him. "No, I wanted to come myself," he blustered, wiping his eyes and trying to laugh. "And you're going to have everything you need to make you comfortable long's you live, Mother Robb!"

She looked at him again and nodded, but she did not even try to speak. There was a good, hot supper ready and her own folks had come; it was the night before Thanksgiving.

TIGHT LACING DOOMED.

The Venus Waist Is Constantly Gaining Popularity.

That English authority, the Westminster Gazette, pronounces the wasp waist doomed. It says that while the news came from Paris, the accepted fountain head of all such information, as a matter of fact the fashion comes from the west end of London. It is really no very new thing in England, this desire to emulate the outline of the Venus de Milo, with her waist of generous circumference. "For years the doctors have been decrying the evils of tight lacing, and it only required the excuse offered by cycling for the ladies who set the fashion of England, and often of the world, to declare in favor of a return to nature. Gradually the Grecian waist has been gaining popularity. A Regent street ladies' tailor, who has sold, he declares a thousand cycling habits this season, stated this morning that his books undoubtedly prove that the standard is increasing. 'They are letting themselves go more and more,' he said, waxing enthusiastic on the subject, 'even those who are inclined to be stout. Would you believe that a lady came in here not long ago and was measured for a morning gown with a twenty-five inch waist? When she came to have it fitted her waist measurement was twenty-seven inches and we had to alter the gown accordingly. We are glad enough to notice the changing fashion and we encourage it all we can. It is much easier for us to give a stylish cut and a perfect fit if we follow nature, by which I mean narrow sleeves, a flat back and a large waist.' The buyer in the costume department of one of the largest and most fashionable west end establishments, who has just returned from Paris, stated to our representative that the change is not very perceptible there at present either on the street or in the shops. He agreed that the standard was steadily increasing, but doubted whether any sudden revolution in form could be expected. It was a matter in which the costumers were at the mercy of the customers, an interesting reversal of the usual arrangement."

The Serapis Engagement.

A Constant Reader, Spellamacheen, B. C., writes as follows with reference to the account of the engagement between Paul Jones' ship and the British warship Serapis, which appeared in "The Week's Anniversaries," in the issue of September 22d: "The description of the fight between Paul Jones and the Seraphis is hardly accurate. Paul Jones with three French frigates lay off Flanboro Head to capture the Baltic merchant fleet under convoy of the 'Serapis,' an old-fashioned weak frigate, and the 'County of Scarboro,' an armed store ship. When the captain of the Serapis sighted Paul Jones' squadron he signalled his convoy to disperse and make for their ports while he and the Countess of Scarboro stood toward the French ships and fought a fierce and unequal action, during which the convoy escaped. He had to surrender to superior force. Paul Jones' ship was so damaged that she sank shortly after. On obtaining his liberty the captain of the Serapis was knighted for his gallantry, and the Corporation of London made him a freeman of the city and presented him with a sword of honor for his service in saving the Baltic fleet."

Tea at $175 Per Pound.

There is a brand of Chinese tea worth $175 a pound. It is the pickings of the first tips of the blossoms. The greatest care must be taken in the picking, and nothing but the bright, golden-hued tip taken off the blossoms. All the picking of this grade is carefully done by hand. The process of drying these tips is as delicate as the picking. The annual output is estimated at 12,000 pounds, valued at $2,100,000. But five pounds of this tea have ever been known to have reached the United States, excepting a few pounds placed on exhibition at the World's Fair.

Trade in False Diamonds.

Thousands of false diamonds are sold yearly in London. People of all ranks buy them. A nobleman is in immediate want of cash, and must find it somehow. He will, perhaps turn to his family diamonds. Possibly £10,000 could be raised on them. He takes the jewelry off to the false diamond provider, has the real stones removed, has the false ones put in, and deposits the actual gems with some one as a security for a loan. No one is a bit the wiser. His wife appears in her jewels just the same as usual. If she didn't her husband would be made bankrupt by his creditors the next week.

HINDOO DOCTORS.

And Their Peculiar Method of Treating the Sick.

The doctor in India, or the "bald," as he is called, is not like the physician of any other country, says an exchange. He is a peculiar genius who acts in a peculiar way. If a well-to-do Hindoo merchant becomes ill with fever he usually fasts three or four days, scarcely even touching water standing by his bed. His relatives become alarmed, but the merchant refuses to have the bald called, in the hope that two or three more days of fasting will cure him. A gray-haired neighbor counsels the sick man not to take any drugs at this stage. Let the fever run as high as it can is the advice given, and further fasting should be indulged in. The fasting does not seem to do the patient any good, so the doctor is finally called. The bald has a reputation as a first-class physician. The family believes that if any man can snatch a sick man from the grasp of death it is the bald. This man of medicine is convinced that all European doctors are but a farce. He will admit their superiority in surgery; but then, in his belief, surgery is not the function of a learned doctor. The brothers of a sick man, after a great deal of entreaty, manage to get the bald to accompany them. Arriving at the patient's house he enters the sick man's room and sits beside him with a great deal of dignity and composure. The servant offers him the "hookah" (a smoking apparatus similar to that used by the Turks.) About ten minutes spent in smoking, he feels the patient's pulse and finds he has a very high fever. The bald then takes a piece of paper, writes on it a few mysterious words, orders a simple diet of lentil soup, gives the sick man two small black pills to swallow, takes another pull of about five minutes at the hookah, leaves the mysterious prescription behind him and departs without giving any further instruction. The patient may get better or possibly he may die, most likely the latter. The Indian doctor finds his profession a sorry one. The highest fee for the complete cure of a rich man is about $10. Some of the balds, however, have been known to effect wonderful cures, where the best European doctors have completely failed. A case is recorded of a European afflicted with asthma, who derived but little benefit from the treatment of his own countrymen. When his case had been pronounced hopeless by the best English physicians a Hindoo doctor gave him a few black pills, which brought about a complete cure in a very short time. The European offered a fabulous price for the secret remedy, but the old bald refused all offers. The bald will never reveal the secret of his remedies, for it would cost him his caste, and caste in India is all in all.

Noble and Stately Structures That Add to the Beauty of St. Louis.

A new idea is being exploited in St. Louis. It is nothing less than the marking of a street at one or both of its extremities by a formal gateway of stone or brick, suggesting to some extent the gate lodge of a great estate. It is known in Paris, where the stately Rue Monceau is entered through an iron gateway of some pretensions to monumental character. London can claim to have used the motive also in Kensington Palace Gardens, and any traveler who has driven through these French or English portals will recall the sense of dignity and privacy which they conveyed, the distinction which they imparted to the entire neighborhood. Here in America, says the New York Tribune, that distinction has seemed beyond us, chiefly because of lack of space. It requires a wide thoroughfare to begin with. To shut up the ends of a narrow street would be absurd, spoiling the horizon and creating a cramped look, where one of breadth is to be desired.

For, given a wide street, nothing more monumental than a big gateway at the end can be imagined. It joins the two sides; it gives them unity; it makes a whole that has an architectural importance and even grandeur which nothing else will secure.

What is especially interesting in the St. Louis experiment is that it creates at points where ordinarily we would look for no art whatever little centers of artistic attractiveness. That is a most refined and stately screen of base, columns and copings which the architects have erected at the west entrance to Vandeventer place, and the gateways built for the entrance to Westmoreland place, equally effective; in equally good taste.

Ate Crackers in Bed.

The many and absurd reasons for divorce that are offered in court have frequently been the subject of amusement to outsiders, but the most laughable that has ever been reported was introduced by a Maine man last week. Under the head of cruel and abusive treatment he testified that he was on the verge of nervous prostration on account of loss of sleep caused by his wife "persisting in eating dry crackers in bed."

SACRED CONFIDENCE.

No Woman's Letter Published Except by Request.

Mrs. Pinkham's Tender Relations With the Suffering of Her Sex—Women Who Cannot Hide Their Happiness.

There is a class of women who, from their own experience, sympathize with their suffering sisters, and in order that such suffering may be lessened, nobly put aside false modesty and in heartfelt gratitude publish to the world what every woman should know.

Mrs. W. L. Elliott, Liscomb, Iowa, is one of those women, and has requested us to publish the facts in her case, otherwise it would not be done, as all such evidence is treated in sacred confidence, unless publication is requested by the writer.

She says to Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish you would publish the circumstances of my case, in order that other women may be benefited by my experience.

"I doctored nearly all the time for two years. I spent several hundred dollars without receiving much benefit. Last June I wrote to you and described all my aches and pains. Such a long list as there was: headache, backache, bearing-down pains, terrible soreness, constipation, dizziness, feeling of extreme lassitude, irregularity and nausea; but you answered my letter and told me just what to do. I followed your advice.

"After taking eight bottles of the Vegetable Compound and three bottles of Blood Purifier, I am glad to write you that I have not enjoyed such good health for years, and I am able to do all my own work. I can surely sound the praises of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and a number of my friends are taking it upon my recommendation."—Mrs. W. L. Elliott, Liscomb, Iowa

So Far as He Knew.

"Are you well?"

"I believe so, yet I can't say positively; I haven't had time to look up the new diseases in to-day's paper."

MARVELOUS RESULTS.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junct. she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing which would last for hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at J. L. Harr's Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1.0C.

The world seldom has a just appreciation of the people who save its money.

Skilfully drawn contracts make up about two-thirds of the fun there is in the world.

The less people know, the more certain they are concerning the truth of what they imagine.

The lazier a man is the more apt he is to spend time complaining because his salary is not large.

It seems almost impossible for talent and sense to become joint tenants of the same human brain.

All people are not so foolish as they look when members of a gaping crowd watch the moving of a safe.

It is a good thing to remember in the giving out of offices that appetite is not a sure sign of capacity.

While a woman is only as old as she looks, a man's age is about equal to that of the company he keeps.

The woman who finds no fault with her fellow woman is as near a saint as it is possible for man to imagine.

The man who tries to make his surroundings fit him has lots of trouble, but generally wins if he perseveres.

It is reported that New York has discarded diamonds entirely. Gotham may regret this in some future hour of need.

A Methodist clergyman in Larabee, Ia., has shot and killed a local tough named Harry McWhirter, but it appears that he acted in self-defense and the universal opinion is that the shooting was entirely justifiable. Still, it is a rather novel role for the clergy.

The United States has finally succeeded in purchasing the house in which Lincoln died in Washington. It is directly opposite Ford's theater and the wounded president was carried thither directly after the fatal shot was fired. Of late years the house has been used as a Lincoln museum, and for the purpose of perpetuating this museum the last congress appropriated the sum of $30,000 for its purchase from the present owner, Louis Schade, proprietor and editor of the Washington Sentinel.

Recently ten little children were sold at auction in the Chicago headquarters of the Salvation Army. Brigadier Fleming conducted the auction and received bids from various people impersonating severally Fame, Art, War, Wealth, Education, Pleasure, Ease, Selfishness and other attributes, the highest bid, naturally, being made by Wealth. Then Mrs. Fleming, impersonating Christianity, outbid Wealth and bought the children. This is probably the most novel means of propagating religious ideas yet attempted by this enthusiastic organization.

The release of Mrs. Castle was to be expected. In fact, the only real injustice done this unfortunate woman was the enormous amount of bail demanded. Since the change in the laws regarding verdicts in England two years ago, the former verdict of "not guilty owing to insanity" is dispensed with and the verdict "guilty but insane" takes its place. Therefore, in the case of such a verdict a judge would have no choice but to send the prisoner to an insane asylum. This is the reason why Mrs. Castle was recommended to offer a straight plea of guilty, and then trust to just what has happened, a "discharge for medical grounds."

The law of increase is reiterated in the history of the potato crop of the Hudson Bay region, as related by the Rev. Edgerton S. Young. He carried with him to that distant land a few potatoes, the size of walnuts, wrapped them in cotton, and hung them near a stove to keep them from freezing. In the spring they had shrunk to the size of peas; but they were planted and carefully nurtured. A pailful of fine potatoes was dug in the autumn. The crop the second year was six bushels; the third year one hundred and twenty-five bushels, which were divided among the natives; until now thousands of bushels annually vary the hitherto exclusive diet of fish and game of the people of northern Canada.

ALL OVER THE WORLD

FROZEN TO DEATH IN SNOW.

Awful Work of a Blizzard in the Northwest.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 30.—Human beings have been frozen to death, cattle have been stampeded, buried and smothered in the snow drifts, trains are delayed, wires are down and the November storm record is broken by the 1896 blizzard that holds the northwest locked in its chilly grasp. How many human lives have been sacrificed can not be told until the snow drifts clear away, months hence. Men are missing everywhere in the heart of the storm. Some are known to be dead and many missing, with the chances very much against them being alive. Almost a dozen are dead in North Dakota. From the cattle country in the western part of that state come reports of intense suffering for the live stock on the ranges, but no definite information can be secured, as the wires are down. Watson Ham, a cattle man, says the losses will be extremely heavy. South Dakota is suffering, too, and reports of loss of life are expected.

NEARLY INSANE.

Mrs. Maybrick Said to Be Broken in Mind and Health.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—A high official connected with the prison at Wormwood Scrubbs tells a startling story of the pitiable condition of Mrs. Maybrick, who is confined in that institution. While she has not wholly lost her reason, the woman, who is serving a life sentence for the alleged poisoning of her husband, is closely bordering on insanity. She has made two attempts to take her own life, one of which was nearly successful. The official states that Mrs. Maybrick will not survive another year of prison life. This is not due to harsh treatment, but the result of close confinement and mental worry. The efforts to secure her release that have been made in America have injured her, as the English home office resents anything that savors of coercion coming from pressure of a foreign power. From present indications, if Mrs. Maybrick should live that long, the official states that she will probably be released within the next year.

A BRUTAL DEED.

A Dog Worth More Than a Negro in Mississippi.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Nov. 23.—A crime, which may result in the death of an inoffensive negro, Sander Swarringen, occurred about five miles north of Columbus. A mob of white men surrounded his house, and after firing his cotton crib, which contained almost his entire crop, commenced shooting at the negro, who, after trying in vain to defend himself, ran to the house of Thomas Belwitt, a white man, for protection, but too late to escape the bullets of his assailants. The mob had no reason to attack Swarringen, except for his having killed a worthless dog belonging to one of his assailants.

NAIL TRUST DEMOLISHED.

Could Not Hold Together and Jobbers Sell at Their Own Price.

CHICAGO, Nov. 23.—The wire nail trust has collapsed and will endeavor to wind up its affairs December 1st. Sale agents representing mills within the pool were scrambling to sell nails at $1.70 a keg in Chicago which is precisely $1 per keg below the trust's circular price, and jobbers were selling in lots of from 1 to 1,000 kegs from store at $2 per keg. Before the end of the present week the price may, it is said be down to $1.25 a keg, or within 30 cents of the lowest price they ever sold here. The trust in a circular to the jobbers gives them liberty to sell at any price they please.

RURAL MAIL SERVICE.

Free Delivery Gives Satisfaction but is Expensive.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Reports showing the results of the rural free delivery of the government are reaching the postoffice department from the localities where the service is being tried. They are said to show general satisfaction with the service and good results of the work as a whole. The reports will be embodied in a special report of the scheme and its feasibility to be forwarded by the postmaster general to congress early in the session. What recommendation he will make is not known, but the immense cost involved in the general adoption of rural free delivery will be pointed out.

FINANCES OF THE NATION.

Treasurer Morgan Reviews the Last Year's Business.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The annual report of Daniel N. Morgan, treasurer of the United States, shows the net ordinary revenues of the government during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, to have been $326,976,200, and the expenditures $352,179,446, leaving a deficiency for the year of $25,203,426, or $17,601,977 less than the preceding fiscal year. The report shows that during the last fiscal year there was an increase of $7,863,134 in the receipts from customs, an increase of $2,479,622 from internal revenue sources, an increase of $2,476,622 from miscellaneous sources, and a loss of $97,823 from the sale of public lands, making the net increase in the receipts $13,568,125. WORST BLIZZARD FOR YEARS.

Northwestern Minnesota and Dakotas Affected Thanksgiving.

St. Paul, Nov. 27.—Various points in northwestern Minnesota and the Dakotas report the worst blizzard for years. At Jamestown, N. D., it has been snowing for the past sixty hours and a blizzard has developed that makes it extremely dangerous for any one to venture out on the prairies. Roads are impassible and it is difficult for ranchmen to get feed to their stock. Stephen, Minnesota, reports two feet of snow on the level and that the worst storm for six years is still raging. Travel is entirely suspended. Aberdeen and Chamberlain, S. D. report heavy storms and it is feared there will be considerable loss of stock on the ranges. The wind is very high and the snow is drifting badly.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 27.—A local powder firm which makes the manufacture and sale of dynamite a specialty received a wire message from its agent in New Orleans asking for prices on dynamite. The request was for the price on ten tons of the deadly explosive. As the shipment of so large an amount of dynamite from this country to Cuba would not be allowed if the United States government could prevent, hence the secrecy as to the identity of the firm.

IOWA PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

DES MOINES, Nov. 23.—A correspondent at Bristow, Iowa, asks, "Can an improvement be patented without the consent of the owner of the original patent?" We answer yes; improvements are always in order and sometimes more valuable than the originals. And one at Lorimer asks "Is a patent taxable?" We answer yes, in some foreign countries, but not in the United States.

Patents have been allowed but not yet issued as follows: To C. C. Calhoun, of Windsor, Mo., for an automatic brake for wagons; To L. Avery, of Montaur, Iowa, (recently deceased) for a hay rake and leader; to Wm. Morley, of Fontanelle, for a band cutter and feeder; to J. A. Drake, of Brooklyn, for an anti-freezing stock waterer; to W. J. Benning, of Boone, for a current motor; to A. T. Dowden, of Prairie City (2) for a potato cutter and a sprocket chain specially adapted for his potato harvester.

THOMAS G. AND J. RALPH ORWIG,
Solicitors of Patents.

Peculiar Luck of a Nebraska Man.

PONCO, Neb., Nov. 26.—John Enders, a farmer living near here, met with a peculiar accident a few days ago. A growth like a cataract has been forming on his left eye for some years, and the sight was nearly gone. Mr. Enders, in chopping kindling, was struck squarely on the left eyeball by a flying chip. The eye bled profusely, and he fainted from the pain. He suffered for two days, and then began to get better. At this time he noticed that he could see plainly with both eyes, and an examination showed that the growth that had covered the eyeball had been cut off as neatly as a surgeon could have done it.

Wishart, a Des Moines policeman, on June 30, 1891. Pierce was sentenced to four years in the penitentiary, but owing to legal technicalities he was not imprisoned until 1893. During his career as "searcher" and constable Pierce shot a number of persons, but always managed to escape conviction. On several occasions he narrowly escaped being mobbed by an outraged and indignant public.

In all, seventeen bones were broken, and cuts and bruises to the number of nearly two score, some of them extremely serious, inflicted all over his body. The only permanent mark of the accident will be a slight stiffness in the lad's left knee. The attending physicians say the boy's recovery is little less than a miracle.

"Fancying he must have sailed for Australia—just then attracting much attention—I recklessly took passage for a port there, leaving my little girl to follow in another ship with a cousin of mine, when she had recovered from a slight indisposition. The blow that came was terrible; the ship they sailed in to join me was lost—never come to port. I returned to England, not daring to murmur, for I felt that I deserved whatever woe might come. When Eleanor was returned to me, the idea of atonement grew more definite. I had heard in India that Paul had a son. Why should not my daughter's hand, and all her wealth make amends to the son for the blight flung on the father's life? At this moment my secret agents are in all parts of the world searching for Paul Kirkland, or his heirs. I never thought that he would change his name. Only two weeks ago I told his history to Eleanor, and asked if she could sacrifice herself to relieve her mother's conscience. Noble indeed was her response. O, how I thank the gracious Providence that has brought good for her out of her mother's evil! Paul's son and Annabel's daughter may be as good and pure and happy as our first happy dreams portrayed for us. Walter, bring me to-morrow the Bible your father writes about. I must talk no more to-day. Go, now, my children, and leave me to rest."

Silently, almost solemnly, Walter passed out, and Eleanor followed—just one moment to raise up her white innocent forehead for the pure betrothal kiss. As Walter's arms enfolded her—his own, his beloved, at last—a world of grateful joy beamed in either eye, although chastened and tempered to pensiveness by their quick sympathy in the sorrowful lives whose recital they have just listened to.

From that day Tom's Bible never left Lady Annabel's side. It was either in her hand, beneath her pillow, or pressed against her heart. She failed swiftly, as though the smothered fire that at length had overleaped its barrier burned more furiously for its long concealment.

The night after the grand marriage which dazzled and astonished all London, when the distinguished artist bore away the star of the court, to lose her proud name as Lady Annabel Collinwood in the humbler but not less honorable one of Vernon—as the young couple sat tenderly beside her, Lady Annabel said softly, with a joyful gleam lighting up her faded and sunken eye:

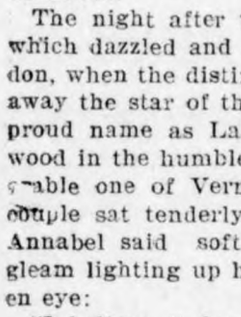
"I believe it has come at last—the ineffable peace of forgiveness—the tranquil content of trusting all things to heavenly grace and mercy—the same that Paul received. Peace—peace!" she repeated, with a rapturous smile, raising herself to lay the well-worn Bible on the table.

The effort—the joy—something was too much for the frail system. Her head drooped, and when her frightened children flew to her relief, Lady Annabel was indeed safely on the shore of Peace!

(THE END.)

THE MINISTER'S WIFE

By Mary Kyle Dallas.



TO BE the minister's wife is the ne plus ultra of distinction in the eyes of a village maiden, particularly in the Eastern States. No one can deny that; and, knowing this to be the case, no one can wonder that a single man is generally successful in a rural district, while a married clergyman finds it far more difficult to make a favorable impression under the argus eyes perpetually fixed upon himself and his spouse, who never, in any case, comports herself in a manner which quite tallies with the preconceived ideas of the spinsters in her husband's congregation as to what the clergyman's wife ought to be.

The gentlemen who had successively, but not successfully, filled the pastorate of Appleblow had good reason to learn this lesson by heart. They had all been married men; they had all had large families and small salaries, principally paid in what was known in the neighborhood as "green truck" and "garden sass," and had never given satisfaction. After the first few months the trustees groaned over the salary. The elders began to wonder whether Brother A. was quite right on "them there doctrinal p'ints." The congregation complained of not being visited enough, of not being sufficiently edified. A few influential personages gave up their pews and traveled miles every Sunday to a church in another village, where they were better pleased, even at the expense of breaking the fourth commandment with regard to the "cattle" and the "man servant." And finally matters came to a crisis, and there was a vacancy in the Appleblow pulpit and a succession of young ministers and old, who preached "by request," and generally made a favorable impression. And finally another call was made, another pastor came was welcomed, feted, treated to donation parties, ascended to the summit of popular favor on the wings of the wind, and descended as rapidly, until his light died out in darkness.

Appleblow was particularly unfortunate in this respect; it was, in fact, famed for its dismission of pastors without peculiar provocation. Many a grave, middle-aged man gave good advice to Walter Redlaw, the newly-fledged clergyman who at last proclaimed himself willing to be installed as pastor of Applebow. Men of more experience, men old enough to be Redlaw's grandfather, had failed there—able men, too, whose orthodoxy could not be questioned. Redlaw was a man of promise—why should he doom himself to certain disappointment at the outset of his career? Nobody approved of the act; but Redlaw, ardent, hopeful, and not twenty-five, was all the more resolved to accept the call. To succeed where no one else had ever succeeded before him, to do good, to become beloved, to see his congregation grow about him, and to end his days at last where he had begun his life of pastor, wept for by old and young, and humbly looking forward for reward in heaven for the good he (as an instrument in his Maker's hands) had done amongst his flock—a pure and beautiful ambition, albeit worldy men might smile at it as being very humble.

So Walter Redlaw came to Applebow and stood before the pulpit during the ceremony of installation one evening and received the charge from the presbytery with an humble determination (God helping him) to obey it and the next Sabbath stood in the pulpit and preached unto the people.

There are some very young men who have all a woman's beauty without being effeminate. ; Walter Redlaw was one of these. He had soft, golden-brown hair, which could not be dubbed "red" by his greatest enemy. A broad, high forehead, white as flesh and blood could be, regular features, pearly teeth, and a color that came and went—now the faintest tinge of rose-leaf, now the deepest carnation. Moreover, he was neither puny nor ungraceful, stood straight as an arrow, and had a voice clear and musical and powerful enough to fill the church without an effort.

That day bright eyes looked up at the young minister, and many a girl, if the truth were but known, thought more of his fair face than of his sermon, and he, preaching with all his soul in the words he uttered, thought not at all of any one of them.

Perhaps they did not quite understand this, for that night, when family prayers were over, and shutters closed and barred, and old folks snoring in their beds, more than one girl in the snug little village of Appleblow stood before her glass and wondered how she would look in white muslin and orange flowers, and all the paraphernalia of a bride; or in black silk dress and broche shawl and straw bonnet trimmed with white ribbon (Appleblow fashions were yet primitive), sailing slowly up the aisle of the little church some Sunday, while envious maidens gazed and whispered, "There goes the minister's wife."

And, at the same moment, Walter Redlaw, sitting at his desk, traced, at the beginning of a long and loving letter, the words—"My dearest Rosa."

Sewing societies, fairs, tea-drinkings, merry-makings of all kinds followed each other in quick succession. Appleblow, so to speak, caroused, though in a genteel and virtuous fashion, for the next three months, and Miss Pinchemall, the dressmaker, took a new apprentice and superintended the fitting department herself, leaving the needle to vulgar hands, so great was the demand upon her skill. New bonnets, too, purchased in "the city," came by express to Appleblow, and the nine Misses Fish excited envy unparalleled by appearing in the first bodices ever seen in the village, all of black velvet trimmed with scarlet.

Successful! there had never been such a success before; nobody dared to find fault with Walter Redlaw, upheld by all the womankind of Appleblow—maid and matron, young and old, grandmothers, granddaughters, mammas, spinsters, aunts and schoolgirls.

By-and-by whispered rumors were set afloat. The young minister had paid particular attention to Miss Smith, he was seen out walking with Miss Brown, he had taken tea thrice with Mrs. Jones, who had two unmarried daughters; in fact, he was engaged in turn to every single lady in the village, if report said truly; though, on the statement being made over the teacups, some one was always found to aver, with downcast looks and conscious blushes, that she had "particular reasons for knowing the rumor could not possibly have slightest foundation."

Then "dearest friends" became rivals, and feminine Damons and Pythiases "didn't speak," and young farmers, tradesmen, the schoolmaster and the doctor were jilted, one and all, in the most ruthless manner, for the fair-haired, blue-eyed young pastor, who had no more thought of aspiring to be king of hearts in Appleblow than he had of attempting to become President of the United States, but was gentle and amiable to all alike.

And so the days passed on. Spring vanished, summer followed in her steps, autumn came, and every grapevine in Appleblow hung heavy with their purple fruitage; and amidst its balmiest days, when a golden haze hung over everything, and russets were more glorious, and the moon seemingly rounder and more brilliant than it ever was before, Walter Redlaw took the train to New York one evening, and it was known that there was to be a strange face in the pulpit on the next Sabbath.

There was a special tea-drinking at Deacon Yarrow's to discuss the cause of this; and stories, hatched no one knew how or by whom, were circulated.

Mr. Rediaw's mother was ill. No, that could not be, for Miss Brown knew "for certain sure," that he lost his mother in infancy.

"His sister was about to be married, and he was to perform the ceremony." Mrs. Morris had this from good authority, but better contradicted her. Mr. Redlaw was an only child, and therefore had no sister to be given in marriage.

Somebody had told Deacon Yarrow that a maiden aunt had died, leaving the minister a large fortune in real estate. This was very favorably received, and gained universal belief. It would have been firmly established, but for a suggestion of old Aunty Brown, who had neither daughter nor granddaughter herself, and who threw cold water on the air-castles of maids and matrons by saying, with a solemn shake of her head, "Mebbe minister's gone tu git married himself."

Aunty Brown was sent to Coventry at once; but, nevertheless, her suggestion made an impression even on those who averred most loudly that it couldn't possibly be so.

(TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.)

NEW YORK FOOD SUPPLY.

Enough on Hand to Withstand a Four-Months' Siege.

If the city of New York and the neighboring district were to be besieged or in some other way entirely cut off from the outside world, and therefore deprived of the food supplies which in normal times come in daily in large quantities, how long would it be before the pinch of hunger would be felt? That is a very hard question to answer, for the reason that there are such inequalities of purchasing capacity in New York society that some go hungry in times of greatest prosperity for lack of means, while the great majority eat more than is good for them. Undoubtedly the number of those who always go hungry would be increased after two or three days of a siege, and then day by day this number would increase until the public authorities would feel compelled to take possession of the food supplies and distribute them among the people. With the exception of milk and some other things the supply of meat, poultry, hardy vegetables and fruits would last for two months at the present rate of consumption. If all the supplies were taken charge of at the beginning of a siege—and this could easily be done—the food within New York could be made to last for four months at least. The siege of Paris lasted only four months. Before two months had passed high and low, rich and poor, had learned what hunger was. And, as is well known, the French are the most thrifty and economical people in the world. In the arrangement and disposition of food the Parisians are especially distinguished. But the food supply in New York could be made to last as long as the Paris siege lasted, and the people would still be comfortable.—Ladies' Home Journal.

THE VANDALIA CASE

Gov. Matthews Wants the Question of Its Debt to Indiana Settled.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 30.—Gov. Matthews has requested Attorney-General Ketchum to ascertain if it possible to take immediate steps to look into the qestion whether or not the Vandalia railroad company owes the commonschool fund of the state $1,500,000. If the attorney-general decides that he has the authority he will intervene in the Vandalia receivership case in the United States court for the purpose of protecting the state's rights. If it shall not be deemed advisable to take this step the governor will recommend in his message to the legislature that a commission be appointed to determine once for all whether this railroad is indebted to the state.

De Kalb, Ill., Nov. 30.—H. L. Brower, a former employe of the De Kalb Fence Company, killed his wife, severely wounded his child and mother-in-law, and killed himself here Friday morning. His wife was stabbed through the the heart, his child was cut through the hand and arm and his mother-in-law in the neck, and his own throat was cut. It is thought that the child and the woman will recover. Brower was not a drinking man and no other cause than insanity can be given.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 30.—The state canvassing board met Friday. The official footing gives Kash, the leading republican elector, 218,171 votes, and Smith, the leading democratic elector, 217,890 votes. The count gives McKinley Kentucky by 281 plurality, and 12 out of 13 electors. The canvass of congressional returns made no changes.

Wish Pensions for Ex-Slaves.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 30.—The Ex-Slaves' Pension association adjourned here Friday, after a session of three days. The Kansas plan was adopted; that is, to organize ex-slaves all over the country to work for the passage of the Vaughan bill, presented to congress by Senator Thurston of Nebraska. The Rev. J. A. Moore of Mississippi and H. R. Hayes, also of Mississippi, were elected president and secretary of the association.

Senator Voorhees Improving.

Washington, Nov. 30.—A prominent citizen of Terre Haute, Ind., writing to a friend in Washington concerning Senator Voorhees' health under date of Nov. 26 says: "The Senator has improved steadily since his return home and is now almost free from pain. He is able to walk out when the weather is good, but he is still weak. He expects to leave next week for Washington."

Gen. Lee Will Return.

Washington, Nov. 30.—Officials of the state department attach no importance to the rumors that Consul General Lee will not return to his post at Havana, because he is said to be unacceptable to the Spanish authorities there. There is no present change in General Lee's purpose to return to his post at an early day.

Burt Found Guilty of Murder.

Austin, Texas, Nov. 30.—The jury in the Burt murder trial handed in a verdict finding him guilty of murder in the first degree, and fixing the punishment at death. The case will be appealed. The crime for which Burt is to hang was the murder of his wife and two children on the night of July 24 last.

May Prove to Be a Murder.

Princeton, Ill., Nov. 30.—A coroner's jury of Bureau county rendered a verdict that the death of Mrs. Laura Goodmanson, eight weeks ago in her husband's dental office at Pender, Thurston county, Neb., was due to strychnine poisoning. As a result the arrest of her husband may follow.

Subscribes to the Full Quota.

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 30.—General Manager Holdredge of the Burlington has announced that the road would contribute $30,000 toward the success of the trans-Mississippi exposition. The amount subscribed by the Burlington is the full amount asked from that company by the exposition directors.

Elevator Burns at St. Paul.

St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 30.—The elevator of the St. Paul Warehouse and Elevator Company burned at 6:30 o'clock Friday night. It contained 100,000 bushels of grain, most of which went down an embankment into the Mississippi. The loss is $100,000; insured for $30,500.

Small Fire in Missouri.

Milan, Mo., Nov. 30.—At Green City, a small town twelve miles east of here, Schuster Bros.' double-brick building was destroyed by fire Thursday night. It was valued at $10,000 and the dry goods and clothing at the same figure. Insurance, $13,000.

An Appeal for Assistance.

The man who is charitable to himself will listen to the mute appeal for assistance made by his stomach, or his liver, in the shape of divers dyspeptic qualms and uneasy sensations in the region of the gland that secretes his bile. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, my dear sir, or madam—as the case may be—is what you require. Hasten to use, if you are troubled with heartburn, wind in the stomach, or note that your skin, or the whites of your eyes are taking a sallow hue.

HOW TO PREVENT PNEUMONIA.

At this time of the year a cold is very easily contracted, and if left to run its course without the aid of some reliable cough medicine is liable to result in that dread disease, pneumonia. We know of no better remedy to cure cough or cold than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. We have used it quite extensively and it has always given entire satisfaction. Olagah, Ind. Ter. Chief.

This is the only remedy that is known to be a certain preventive of pneumonia Among the many thousands who have used it for colds and la grippe. We have never yet learned of a single case having resulted in pneumonia. Persons who have week lungs or have reason to fear an attack of pneumonia, should keep the remedy at hand. The case of Lou Kellihan, the Sherburne bank robber was indicted at Fairmont last week for murder in the first degree. On motion of his attorneys the case was continued and set for trial February 16. His attorneys are McMillen & Dunlap, of Rock Rapids Lorin Cray, of Fairmont. The defense will be temporary insanity. In the motion for continuance the defense say they will prove by the superintendent of schools that he was alright at times and by spells would "act strange and queer;" that the physicians will testify that both boys were not right mentally. As there is no one to testify who did the shooting it will be a difficult matter to convict him of murder, but it will be no grate difficulty to convict him of robbery.—Armstrong Journal.

Elmer Holt, of Ada, Minn., aged 14, was frozen to death in the terrible blizzard last week. On Thanksgiving he and his father started with a team for the poplar woods, fifteen miles distant to get a load of wood. On returning they lost their bearings in the blinding snow storm and started afoot to look for shelter. They became separated, the elder Holt succeeding in finding a farm house after wandering about all night. Searching parties started out in the morning to look for the boy but it was not till Saturday that he was found frozen stiff. The father was also badly faozen.

The flood in the Chippawa bottoms near Pepin, Wis., is increasing in fury. The Chicago, Millwaukee & Chippewa Valley road is badly washed out and is covered with trees, limbs and ice gorges for miles. There will be no traffic for a week or ten days. The bridge over Smith's slough, a few miles below Trevino Junction on the C. B. & N. is unsafe. A rock train and big crew are at work on it. There are jams of ice and logs in the Chippewa at the Burlington bridge, at Chippewa Valley bridge, at Read's landing and at the West Newton slough above Alma. The water is at a standstill but more trouble is feared unless the jam breaks. There are 3,000,000 feet of logs and forty cribs of lumber in the jams. All the hay in the meadows is lost and considerable stock is gone. Five families were rescued from the upper stories and roofs in the flooded districts.

Missing Iowa Man Found Dead.

Nov. 28.—While out hunting near Sidney, several boys discovered the badly decomposed body of a man which upon investigation, proved to be that of Moses Yowell, who disappeared from Sidney about two months ago.

Yowell was P. M. at Sedney and the postoffice authorites, suspecting that all was not correct in that office, sent a man to investigate the matter, who discovered a shortage of about $800. Yowell stated that he had the money at his house and was allowed to go after it, but failed to return.

No marks of violence were found upon the body, and it is presumed that he took poison. No man in Freemont county stood higher in public esteem than Yowell, and after his disappearence the citizens of Sidney petitioned for and succeeded in having his daughter appointed to fill the vacancy. He caaried about $6.000 life insurance.—C. R. Rep.

About 11 o'clock last Sutarday morning, Nicholas, aged 11 years the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Mathies, who live south of Sexton, was feeding a feed grinder when his left hand got caught in the machinery and before he could extricate it the hand was wrenched from the arm at the wrist. The brave little fellow, more concerned about his mother's feelings than his pain, ran to the house and holding the stub up said, "Mother, please don't cry, see I can stand it and will be able to work too." The hand was afterward picked up in his mitten which he had on at the time. Dr. Kenny Dressed the arm and says he is getting along remarkably well.—Wesley Reporter.

Talmage's Sermon.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1896.—Considering the time and place of its delivery, this sermon of Dr. Talmage is of absorbing and startling interest. It is not only national, but international in its significance. His subject was "The Dying Century," and the text, 2. Kings 20:1: "Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live."

No alarm bell do I ring in the utterance of this text, for in the healthy glow of your countenances I find cause only for cheerful prophecy; but I shall apply the text as spoken in the ear of Hezekiah, down with a bad carbuncle, to the nineteeth century, now closing. It will take only four more long breaths, each year a breath, and the century will expire. My theme is The Dying Century.

Eternity is too big a subject for us to understand. Some one has said it is a great clock, that says "Tick" in one century, and "Tack" in another. But we can better understand Old Time, who has many children, and they are the centuries, and many grandchildren, and they are the years. With the dying Nineteenth Century we shall this morning have a plain talk, telling him some of the good things he has done, and then telling him some of the things he ought to adjust before he quits this sphere and passes out to join the eternities. We generally wait until people are dead before we say much in praise of them. Funeral eulogium is generally very pathetic and eloquent with things that ought to have been said years before. We put on cold tombstones what we ought to have put in the warm ears of the living. We curse Charles Sumner while he is living, and cudgel him into spinal meningitis, and wait until, in the rooms where I have been living the last year, he puts his hand on his heart and cries "Oh!" and is gone, and then we make long procession in his honor, Doctor Sunderland, chaplain of the American senate, accompanying; stopping long enough to allow the dead senator to lie in state in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, and halting at Boston State House, where not long before, damnatory resolutions had been passed in regard to him, and then move on, amid the tolling bells and the boom of minute-guns, until we bury him at Mount Auburn and cover him with flowers five feet deep. What a pity he could not have been awake at his own funeral, to hear the gratitude of the nation! What a pity that one green leaf could not have been taken from each one of the mortuary garlands and put upon his table while he was yet alive at the Arlington! What a pity that out of the great choirs who chanted at his obsequies one little girl, dressed in white, might not have sung to his living ear a complimentary solo! The post-mortem expression contradicted the ante-mortem. The nation could not have spoken the truth both times about Charles Sumner. Was it before or after his decease it lied? No such injustice shall be inflicted upon this venerable Nineteenth Century. Before he goes we recite in his hearing some of the good things he has accomplished. What an addition to the world's intelligence he has made! Look at the old school-house, with the snow sifting through the roof and the filthy tin cup hanging over the water-pail in the corner, and the little victims on the long benches without backs, and the illiterate schoolmaster with his hickory gad, and then look at our modern palaces of free schools, under men and women cultured and refined to the highest excellence, so that, whereas in our childhood we had to be whipped to go to school, children now cry when they cannot go. Thank you, venerable Century, while at the same time we thank God. What an addition to the world's inventions! Within our century the cotton gin. The agricultural machines, for planting, reaping and threshing. The telegraph. The phonograph, capable of preserving a human voice from generation to generation. The typewriter, that rescues the world from worse and worse penmanship. And stenography, capturing from the lips of the swiftest speaker more than two hundred words a minute. Never was I so amazed at the facilities of our time as when, a few days ago, I telegraphed from Washington to New York a long and elaborate manuscript, and a few minutes after, to show its accuracy, it was read to me through the long-distance telephone, and it was exact down to the last semicolon and comma. What hath God wrought! Oh, I am so glad I was not born sooner. For the tallow candle the electric light. For the writhing of the surgeon's table God-given anaesthetics, and the whole physical organism explored by sharpest instrument, and giving not so much pain as the taking of a splinter from under a child's finger-nail. For the lumbering stage-coach the limited express train. And there is the spectroscope of Fraunhofer, by which our modern scientist feels the pulse of other worlds throbbing with light. Jenner's arrest by inoculation of one of the world's worst plagues. Doctor Keeley's emancipation for inebriety. Intimation that the virus of maddened canine, and cancer, and consumption are yet to be balked by magnificent medical treatment. The eyesight of the doctor sharpened until he can look through thick flesh and find the hiding place of the bullet. What advancement in geology, or the catechism of the mountains; chemistry, or the catechism of the elements; astronomy, or the catechism of the stars; electrology, or the catechism of the lightnings. What advancement in music. At the beginning of this century, confining itself, so far as the great masses of the people were concerned, to a few airs drawn out on accordion or massacred on church bass viol; now enchantingly dropping from thousands of fingers in Handel's Concerto in B flat, or Guilmant's Sonata in D minor. Thanks to you, O Century! before you die, for the asylums of mercy that you have founded—the blind seeing with their fingers, the deaf hearing by the motion of your lips, the born imbecile by skillful object-lesson lifted to tolerate intelligence. Thanks to this century for the improved condition of most nations. The reason that Napoleon made such a successful sweep across Europe at the beginning of the century was that most of the thrones of Europe were occupied either by imbeciles or profligates. But the most of the thrones of Europe are to-day occupied by kings and queens competent. France a republic, Switzerland a republic, and about fifty free constitutions, I am told, in Europe. Twenty million serfs of Russia manumitted. On this western continent I can call the roll of many republics. Mexico, Guatemala, San Salvador, Costa Rica, Paraguay, Uruguay, Honduras, New Granada, Venezuela, Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia, Chili, Argentine Republic, Brazil. The once straggling village of Washington to which the United States government moved, its entire baggage and equipment packed up in seven boxes which got lost in the woods near this place, now the architectural glory of the continent, and admiration of the world.

The money power, so much denounced and often justly criticised, has covered this continent with universities, and free libraries, and asylums of mercy. The newspaper press which, at the beginning of the century was an ink-roller, by hand moved over one sheet of paper at a time, has become the miraculous manufacturer of four or five, or six hundred thousand sheets for one daily newspaper's issue. Within your memory, O Dying Century! has been the genesis of nearly all the great institutions evangelistic. At London Tavern, March 7, 1802, British and Foreign Bible Society was born. In 1816 American Bible Society was born. In 1824 American Sunday School Union was born. In 1810 American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, which has put its saving hand on every nation of the round earth, was born at a haystack in Massachusetts. The National Temperance Society. The Woman's Temperance Society, and all the other temperance movements born in this century. Africa, hidden to other centuries, by exploration in this century has been put at the feet of civilization, to be occupied by commerce and Christianity. The Chinese wall, once an impassible barrier, now is a useless pile of stone and brick. Our American nation at the opening of this century only a slice of land along the Atlantic coast, now the whole continent in possession of our schools and churches and missionary stations. Sermons and religious intelligence which in other times, if noticed at all by the newspaper press, were allowed only a paragraph of three or four lines, now find the columns of the secular press in all the cities, thrown wide open, and every week for twenty-six years without the omission of a single week, I have been permitted to preach one entire Gospel sermon through the newspaper press. I thank God for this great opportunity. Glorious Old Century! You shall not be entombed until we have, face to face, extolled you. You were rocked in a rough cradle, and the inheritance you received was for the most part poverty, and struggle, and hardship, and poorly covered graves of heroes and heroines of whom the world had not been worthy, and atheism, and military despotism, and the wreck of the French revolution. You inherited the influences that resulted in Aaron Burr's treason, and another war with England, and Battle of Lake Erie, and Indian savagery, and Lundy's Lane, and Dartmoor massacre, and dissension, bitter and wild beyond measurement, and African slavery, which was yet to cost a national hemorrhage of four awful years and a million precious lives. Yes, dear Old Century, you had an awful start, and you have done more than well, considering your parentage and your early environment. It is a wonder you did not turn out to be the vagabond century of all time. You had a bad mother and a bad grandmother. Some of the preceding centuries were not fit to live in—their morals were so bad, their fashions were so outrageous, their ignorance was so dense, their inhumanity so terrific. O Dying Nineteenth Century! before you go we take this opportunity of telling you that you are the best and mightiest of all the centuries of the Christian Era, except the first, which gave us the Christ, and you rival that century in the fact that you, more than all the other centuries put together are giving the Christ to all the world. One hundred and twelve thousand dollars at one meeting a few days ago contributed for the world's evangelization. Look at what you have done, O thou abused and depreciated Century! All the Pacific isles, barred and bolted against the Gospel when you began to reign, now all open, and some of them more Christianized than America. No more as once written over the church doors in Cape Colony, "Dogs and Hottentots not admitted." The late Mr. Darwin contributing twenty-five dollars to the Southern Missionary Society. Cannibalism driven off the face of the earth.

Tell us, O Nineteenth Century! before you go, in a score of sentences, some of the things you have heard and seen. The veteran turns upon us and says: "I saw Thomas Jefferson riding in unattended from Monticello, only a few steps from where you stand, dismount from his horse and hitch the bridle to a post, and on yonder hill take the oath of the presidential office. I saw yonder capital ablaze with war's incendiarism. I saw the puff of the first steam engine in America. I heard the thunders of Waterloo, of Sebastopol, and Sedan, and Gettysburg. I was present at all the coronations of the kings and queens, and emperors and empresses now in the world's palaces. I have seen two billows roll across this continent and from ocean to ocean; a billow of revival joy in 1857, and a billow of blood in 1864. I havfie seen four generations of the human race march across this world and disappear. I saw their cradles rocked and their graves dug. I have heard the wedding bells and the death bells of near a hundred years. I have clapped my hands for millions of joys and wrung them in millions of agonies. I saw Macready and Edwin Forrest act, and Edward Payson pray. I heard the first chime of Longfellow's rhythms, and before anyone else saw them I read the first line of Bancroft's History, and the first verse of Bryant's 'Thanatopsis,' and the first word of Victor Hugo's almost supernatural romance. I heard the music of all the grand marches and the lament of all the requiems that for nigh ten decades made the cathedral windows shake. I have seen more moral and spiritual victories than all of my predecessors put together. For all you who hear or read this valedictory I have kindled all the domestic firesides by which you ever sat, and roused all the halloos and roundelays and merriments you have ever heard, and unrolled all the pictured sunsets and starry banners of the midnight heavens that you have ever gazed at. But ere I go, take this admonition and benediction of a Dying Century. The longest life, like mine, must close: Opportunities gone never come back, as I could prove from nigh a hundred years of observation: The eternity that will soon take me will soon take you: The wicked live not out half their days, as I have seen in ten thousand instances: The only influence for making the world happy is an influence that I, the Nineteenth Century, inherited from the first century of the Christian era—the Christ of all the centuries. Be not deceived by the fact that I have lived so long, for a century is a large wheel that turns a hundred smaller wheels, which are the years and each one of those years turns three hundred and sixty-five smaller wheels, which are the days; and each one of the three hundred and sixty-five days turns twenty-four smaller wheels, which are the hours; and each one of those twenty-four hours turns sixty smaller wheels, which are the minutes; and those sixty minutes turn still smaller wheels, which are the seconds. And all of this vast machinery is in perpetual motion, and pushes us on and on toward the great eternity whose doors will, at 12 o'clock of the winter night between the year nineteen hundred, and the year nineteen hundred and one, open before me, the Dying Century. I quote from the three inscriptions over the three doors of the Cathedral of Milan. Over one door, amid a wreath of sculptured roses, I read: 'All that which pleases us is but for a moment.' Over another door, around a sculptured cross, I read: 'All that which troubles us is but for a moment.' But over the central door I read: 'That only is important which is eternal.' O eternity! eternity! eternity!"

My hearers, as the Nineteenth Century was born while the face of this nation was yet wet with tears because of the fatal horseback ride that Washington took, out here at Mt. Vernon, through a December snowstorm, I wish the next century might be born at a time when the face of this nation shall be wet with the tears of the literal or spiritual arrival of the great deliverer of nations, of whom St. John wrote with apocalyptic pen: "And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering, and to conquer."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound, or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Texas.

In the agricultural line, Texas leads all other states in the variety of its products. Cotton, corn, and the cereals grow and are raised in every section of the state, and in the central and southern portions sugar cane and sorghum cane are profitably cultivated. On the gulf coast two or three crops of vegetables are raised each year. Berries are shipped six weeks in advance of the home crop in the north. Pears, peaches, plums, oranges, figs, olives, and nuts all grow abundantly and can be marketed from two to three weeks in advance of the California crops. Large quantities of rice are now grown.

If the land seeker, the home seeker, and the settler desires to secure a farm larger than the one he occupies, on vastly more reasonable terms; if he wants more land to cultivate, a greater variety of crops to harvest, with proportionately increased remuneration, at a less outlay for cost of production; if he wants an earlier season, with correspondingly higher prices; if he wants milder winters, all the year pasturage for his stock, improved health, increased bodily comforts, and wealth and prosperity he should go to Texas.

SAVED FROM THE GRAVE.

He Firmly Believes That the Use of Dr Williams' Pink Pills Saved Him From the Grave.

From Bulletin-Journal, Independence, Iowa.

John Artus is one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Independence, Iowa. He is a large contractor and was for years Superintendent of the masons and plasterers during the building of the Iowa Hospital for the Insane, often having as many as 250 men under his charge. Said Mr. Artus to a reporter recently:

"I had for years been troubled with rheumatism, often being compelled to keep my bed for weeks at a time. I sought relief from home physicians, but in vain. At times I suffered so severely that I was all but dead. Had often heard that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were an almost infallible cure for my ailment, and at the suggestion of a friend began to take them. Thank God I did so; for from the very first dose I found relief. I continued to take them until in a short time I lost all signs of rheumatism. It has been over three years since I took the pills, and no sign of my old malady has returned. As true as I believe there is a God in heaven, do I believe that had I not taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at the time I did that I to-day would be in my grave. I give this testimony willingly, hoping it will shed light to some other sufferer of that awful disease.

(Signed) "JOHN ARTUS."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness, either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk, or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

IS dairying overdone? Poor dairying is overdone, but good dairying is not. This is about as correct an answer as occurs at this time, writes F. W. Moseley in Indiana Farmer. The number of cows anywhere cannot be increased only at about a certain ratio each year. Those who keep cows for dairy purposes keep small herds as a rule, and until a successful milking machine has been produced and comes into general use this condition will likely continue. Of course there are some large dairies in this country where cows are kept by the hundreds, but such herds are rather rare exceptions, and a good proportion of them are kept by milkmen not far from large cities. These herds are kept up by purchase, and the owners of them can be more properly called milkmen than dairymen. They are not dairymen in the true sense. They do not raise their herds nor the crops on which they are fed, but depend mainly on purchase of feed used. Most of these herds are managed very successfully, and by men who give the business intelligent attention. There is little danger of the milk business, as it relates to large cities, being overdone. But if at any time it should be, those in it on a large scale near cities can get out of it very easily by disposing of their herds. Those who are distant from the cities who have been furnishing milk for milk routes, can easily change to some other branch of the business, such as butter or cheese making. The real question whether dairying is overdone, or likely to be overdone, applies to those dairymen who have for years been growing up herds for dairy cows, and to all farmers who keep a few cows, and who can each year, if they choose to do so, increase them up to the capacities of their farms, which capacities will be constantly increasing if the right system of dairying is correctly conducted. One great thing in favor of dairying is that the real profit consists in not seeing how many cows a farm will keep, as much as in seeing how much can be produced from each cow. These dairymen who practice the best methods and get the best results cannot be driven out of the business by an occasional depression of prices. The man who makes his small herd of, say six to twelve cows, produce as much butter or cheese as his neighbor who keeps nearly double that number, will not say anything about dairying being overdone, because his products cost him less, and as a result he gets more for them pound for pound than the dairyman who is keeping double the number of cows. The result will be that the man who does not succeed in dairying will go out of the business; either that or improve his methods. In addition to our home markets we have good markets abroad, provided we furnish good dairy products. However, our home markets can be greatly enlarged by the same means, and the additional means of producing a greater variety of dairy products. This last reference is mainly to the different variety of cheese that can be produced, and such varieties as will create a greater demand for cheese among American people. Doubtless the dairy interest has suffered more from bogus dairy products than from any over-production of genuine goods. But it is safe to say that there has been a great change in public opinion in regard to curtailing the output of bogus goods to be sold as genuine. No objection is made to the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine if they are sold for what they are, but the presumption is that in a large per cent of cases persons who buy them for consumption buy them for genuine products. This is not right and should be stopped, and in a great measure will be. Taking everything into consideration, we think it is safe to conclude, as stated in the first sentence of this article, that good dairying is not overdone, and further, that it is in no immediate danger of being overdone. Like all other branches of agriculture, it will have its seasons of depression, but as a rule less frequent than in most other lines of farm products.

Making Money in Poultry.

When we foot up the sales this year I think I shall find a larger cash balance than we have had for some years, and I think this is due to two things, says a poultry breeder. First, better feeding; and, second, wiser marketing. Of one thing I am sure, and that is that I never before got as many eggs in a season from the same number of fowls, and I never fed so regularly and carefully. Our hens are now many of them moulting, and the number is reduced to about eighty, as we lost quite a number from apoplexy during the hot weather, cooked several before the young chickens were old enough to eat, and sold a few to a neighbor; but during the two months of July and August we sold 183 dozen of eggs from them. I did not keep an account of the eggs used in the family, but as this is the season of the year for picnics and company, and on several occasions we used more than a dozen eggs a day, I think that our hens laid fully 200 dozen eggs in the two months. In these times of low prices, $9 or $10 a month in cash is not to be considered insignificant.

At no time during these two months did the hucksters who pass my house pay more than 7 cents a dozen for eggs, or the grocer more than 8 cents in trade, but my eggs were all sold for cash to one customer for 10 cents. How could I get above the market price? By warranting every egg fresh, and furnishing only clean, attractive looking eggs. I say to any customer who will agree to take eggs regularly of me: "If you find a bad egg among them, I will replace it with two." I can afford to make this offer because I attend to gathering the eggs myself, and as I leave no nest eggs and have clean nests my eggs are not only good and fresh, but attractive in appearance. If an egg gets soiled, as sometimes one will, it is carefully washed and dried with a towel. The eggs are kept in a cool cellar, and delivered to my customers on a fixed day each week.

Western Sheep Men.

The heaviest sheep owners of Colorado and Wyoming are not the men who came into this country from twenty to twenty-five years ago with capital that they invested in herds, but the owners of thousands of sheep at the present day are their former employes, says Denver Field. The men with the capital obtained the experience, not always profitable, while the hired herdsmen, many of them very intelligent Americans from the east, obtained their wages and profited by their experience. They secured little flocks that have now grown to thousands in number of sheep, studied conditions carefully, adapted themselves to the conditions, until to-day they are able to profitably compete with the great wool-producing foreign countries. The sheep owners of the past in this country endeavored to run what they called a sheep ranch. This means keeping the herds on the same tract of land year after year until the land was unable to sustain them. Rotation in pasture for sheep is just as necessary as rotation of crops on a farm. This system of changing ranges or pastures for sheep has been the custom in Spain and Switzerland for centuries, and also other countries. Sheepmen have failed by trying to keep the sheep winter and summer on the same range. There have been exceptions to the eastern methods, but they are few.

An English Co-Operative Failure.—Many of our readers will regret to hear that the effort lately made in the north to establish a co-operative association for the sale of Aberdeenshire meat in London has failed. The scheme was generally a good one, but it met with inadequate pecuniary support, notwithstanding the fact that it was taken up both by lairds and producers. The objects aimed at were to supply the consumers in London with the best quality of the genuine Aberdeenshire produce, and to enable the producer to receive the full value of his cattle and sheep, without so much of the profits being diverted into the pockets of middlemen. The exposures made before the house of lords' commission, and other circumstances, have created a conviction in the minds of northern farmers that they were being defrauded by the state of things prevailing in the meat trade, and a remedy was sought in co-operation. The method proposed was to open shops in the metropolis exclusively for the sale of northern beef and mutton. There is little doubt that purchasers would have appreciated the opportunity that would have been thus afforded them for obtaining prime British-fed meat, about the origin of which there could be no deception. But the scheme has failed on the financial difficulty—sufficient capital was not forthcoming; and for the present both producers and consumers will have to be content with the old arrangements of supply and sale.—London Farmer.

A Homesick Horse.—A day or two ago a gentleman told of his having pensioned an old work horse that for years had done good service. He put him out on nice pasture for the remainder of his days. The horse cleared the fence and came home. Three times the experiment was repeated till they became convinced the horse was too homesick to stand it. When they hitched him to his old wagon his manifestations of joy were almost human, and now he is delivering groceries, as he's been doing for almost a score of years, green pastures having no allurements for this town horse.—National Stockman.

Horses Going out in Paris.—Machinery is generally superseding horse traction on the Paris tramways. Already there are steam trams by the side of the Seine, from the Louvre to Versailles, and from the Arc Triomphe to various points, while mechanical traction, either by steam or electricity, is in contemplation on other lines.

THE KLEMME TIMES.

KLEMME, - - - IOWA

eLt no man suppose that he arrives at his full growth while alive.

A large majority of mankind are in favor of going right if somebody will only show them how.

Women should go to men when they need help, and the latter visit the former when they require sympathy.

Where the heart is right, there is true patriotism. This was said long ago, but it is a sound sentiment for this day and country.

"Man wants but little here below"—
So ran an ancient rhyme,
It's different now; he wants the earth,
And wants it all the time.

Fame is something of slow and steady growth, while notoriety comes and goes with the rapidity of flashlight advertisements of patent medicines.

Men do not have half the ailments that afflict women, but a visitor from a strange world would not suspect the fact by merely coming here to listen.

Anarchist Mowbray says that "music propagates anarchy." Mr. Mowbray evidently has heard a little German band inciting to riot in front of a saloon.

In Switzerland, where women do all of the work in the hay-fields, there are probably few grass widows. But there may be nothing but grass widows there for all we know.

King Humbert has signed a treaty giving to King Menelik Abyssinian territory which Menelik always owned and Italy couldn't steal. Such magnanimity is surprising.

A Boston paper suggests that the negroes are entitled to representation in the cabinet. There can be no doubt that many cabinet rumors nowadays are altogether too highly colored, anyway.

A campaign word that has done duty in this country for more than half a century is "roorback." It means a fiction concocted in one political party in the hope of injuring another party and designed to be put forth so late that there will not be sufficient time before election day for counteracting any injurious effect that it may have. The origin of the word was in the name of a fictitious Baron Roorbach, the story of whose supposed travels was part of the campaign literature of the year 1844. The roorback is not a potent weapon nowadays. Indeed, it is pleasant to know that the roorback is sometimes a come-back—a boomerang.

A Norwegian boy was too poor to get a university education, but this fact did not discourage him. He was determined to learn and to make good use of what he learned. When eighteen years of age he became an itinerant teacher. He had a taste and talent for philological work. In time he had made a name by what he published. What he did for the Norwegian language received the praise of scholars and the gratitude of his countrymen. This son of poor peasants died recently at the age of eighty-three, and his fame as a lexicographer and poet is secured. This example of an intelligent determination to triumph over hindrances and to make the most of one's self is worth much to the world. There is such a thing as making opportunity, as the life of Ivar Aasen finely shows.

The commissioner general of immigration in his annual report shows that during the last fiscal year the arrivals of immigrants in this country aggregated 343,267, of whom 340,468 were landed and 2,799 were debarred and deported at the expense of the various steamship lines by which they came. Of those deported 776 were found to be under contract to perform labor in the United States made prior to their arrival, and 2,033 were returned as belonging to other prohibited classes. In addition to the number debarred there were 238 who became public charges within a year after their arrival, and hence were returned to the countries whence they came. The commissioner general states that he knows of no immigrant landed in this country during the last year who is now a burden upon any public or private institution. With some exceptions, the report says, the physical characteristics of the year's immigration were those of a hardy, sound, laboring class, accustomed and apparently well able to earn a livelihood wherever capable and industrious labor can secure employment. As to occupations, it was composed largely of the classes designated as skilled and unskilled laborers, with some professionals. The amount of money brought into the country by immigrants was at least $4,917,318, and probably was largely in excess of these figures.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

WILL ARREST OFFICERS.

Federal Court is After Soldiers' Home Commandant and Trustees.

DES MOINES, Dec. 5.—United States District Attorney C. D. Fullen is preparing to explode a bomb that will stir up the old soldiers and produce a sensation in political circles. He proposes to cause the arrest, on information before Commissioner Mason, of J. R. Ratekin, commandant of the soldiers' home at Marshalltown, and all the commissioners of the home. These are S. B. Evans, of Ottumwa; J. J. Russell, of Jefferson; A. T. Birchard, of Marshalltown; C. D. Davidson, of Hull; L. B. Raymond, of Hampton; and John W. Morton, of Washington. The arrests will grow out of the plan of the home in compelling pensioners who are inmates of the home to pay it all their pensions in excess of $6 a month. They will be accused of violating sections 4,745 and 4,747, revised statutes of the United States, protecting pensioners in their rights to their pensions.

A $300,000 WRECK.

Northwestern Will Lose About That Amount by the Logan Affair.

DES MOINES, Dec. 4.—An attorney representing the Northwestern road, in discussing the cost to the company of settling damage claims growing out of the terrible wreck at Logan last summer, in which twenty-seven people were killed, said to date it has cost the company $203,000 to settle damage claims, and there are still cases to settle. The company has not as yet defended against any of the claims, but has settled all of them out of court. These figures do not include the loss to property. He estimated that when property losses are figured in, and the three cases remaining to be settled are disposed of, the cost to the company will run close to $300,000.

JAMES PAUL RELEASED.

WEBSTER CITY, Dec. 5.—The jury in the Paul murder case returned a verdict finding the accused not guilty. Their deliberations extended over thirteen hours. The verdict is a surprise to many who have heard the evidence in the case. Dr. George Paul, the father, has been released with his son.

NEW HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING.

Bonds Sold and a $32,000 Structure Will Be Erected at Oskaloosa.

OSKALOOSA, Dec. 4.—The city school board has sold $30,000 worth of school district bonds at 4½ per cent interest. A Chicago firm did the buying. A contract has been entered into with Benseorpf & Co., of Marshalltown, to erect at once a $30,000 high school building.

Crushed to Death.

DUBUQUE, Dec. 5.—Wm. Schuster, a single man 24 years old, was frightfully crushed by a wood sawing machine at Sherrill's Mound. Schuster found some men at work with the machine and stepped onto the platform resting on the horse power. The men warned him off, telling him there was danger in trifling about the machine, but Schuster responded to their warning by dancing a jig. He stepped off on the wrong side and between the sweeps and the bull-wheel, with the result that he was drawn through the machine and crushed so badly about the abdomen that the physician holds out no hope of recovery.

Accidentally Killed by a Gun.

ARISPE, Dec. 5.—While putting his rifle away, the 18-year-old son of Joseph Lamb, a farmer living near Arispe, accidentally shot himself through the head, dying instantly.

TWENTY YEARS.

Young Teuscher's Sentence for Killing His Grandfather.

BURLINGTON, Dec. 4.—Henry Teuscher, who was found guilty of the murder of his grandfather, old man Krekel, the jury returning a verdict of murder in the second degree, was sentenced by Judge Smythe to twenty years in the Fort Madison penitentiary at hard labor. He is 25 years old. The sentence will expire in about fifteen years. The sentence for manslaughter, as provided by the code, ranges from ten years to life. Teuscher was unaffected by the sentence.

LITTLE FOUND GUILTY.

The Grinnell Hotel Keeper Will Have to Suffer for His Crime.

DES MOINES, Dec. 3.—W. A. Little, of Grinnell, was found guilty in federal court of sending obsene literature through the mails. The defense acknowledged sending the letter, but set up that it was not obscene. No evidence was introduced. The court instructed the jury, and the question as to whether the matter contained in the letter was obscene was left to the jury, who concluded that it was.

J. A. DYER KILLED.

Awful Wreck on the Rock Island, East of Malcom.

FLESHER CONFESSES.

He Shot Joe Morris While Out Driving With Him Near Clarkson.

INDIANOLA, Dec. 7.—John Flesher is confined in the Warren county jail awaiting a preliminary hearing for shooting Joe Morris. Flesher has confessed that he did the shooting, but claims the discharge of his revolver was accidental. Morris is steadily improving under the care of physicians and will probably recover. Morris and Flesher, accompanied by two young ladies, were driving near the town of Clarkson. Flesher and one of the young ladies occupied the rear seat. While on a covered bridge Morris was shot in the back. It was dark on the bridge, and until Flesher's confession the affair was shrouded in mystery.

A. W. MANNING DEAD.

Thrown From His Buggy While Returning to Keosauqua.

KEOSAUQUA, Dec. 7.—As A. W. Manning was returning to Keosauqua his team ran away and threw him out, from the effects of which he has since died. Mr. Manning was a son of Hon. Edwin Manning, and was the manager of his father's farm and stock interests. He was president of the county agricultural society, and one of the ablest and most popular and prominent young business men in the southwestern part of the state.

Muscatine Has a $30,000 Fire.

MUSCATINE Dec. 4.—The Columbia, Muscatine's principal theatre, was destroyed by fire; loss $30,000; insurance $7,500; origin unknown.

IOWA CONDENSED.

The contract for the structural work of the new insane asylum to be built at Cherokee has been awarded to the Butler-Ryan Company, of St. Paul. The bid was $295,173.

In the district court at Maquoketa Judge House granted a change of venue from Jackson to Clinton county in the case of Christian Eckerlebe, accused of the murder of Mina Keil on the afternoon of July 5th.

The Shoe and Leather Reporter publishes each week a list of shipments of boots and shoes. The issue of November 26 shows a total for the preceding week of 67,965 cases shipped; the corresponding week of last year showed 60,825 cases. Only five houses in the United States had a larger number of cases shipped to them than did Bentley & Olmsted of Des Moines, who had a little more than twice as many as all the other dealers in Iowa.

Council Bluffs dispatch: The families of James Shadden and Elijah McClure, old settlers of Cresent township and neighbors for a generation, got into a quarrel over a remark made by one of the McClure boys about a young lady to whom one of the Shadden boys was paying his addresses and in the melee Elijah McClure was stabbed five times. Dave McClure had three fingers chewed into mincemeat, Orville McClure had his nose broken, James Shadden was stabbed twice, Orvis Shadden was cut over the left eye and Arthur Shadden was cut about the head and had a portion of his lower lip bitten off.

Burlington dispatch: George Wilber and his wife and the latter's nephew, Emery Fegley, aged 18, lived in a single-roomed hut in a lonely spot three miles from Augusta. The old man had been sick and half crazy for some time. Mrs. Wilber left him and the boy at home and went to call on a neighbor. After she was gone Wilber secured a revolver and went to shoot the boy. Then followed a battle for life. The young lad struggled desperately against the raving old man, but to no purpose. The old man got upon him and placing the revolver close to his head fired it, blowing the boy's brains out. He then left the house and in an hour or so returned. Mrs. Wilber was returning about the same time and saw the old man enter and at once heard a pistol shot. She called a neighbor and they found the old man dead on the floor and the boy crouched behind the stove, stone dead. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of murder and suicide.

ENGLAND MAKES IT GOOD.

Will Pay the Expenses of the Soudan Expedition.

CAIRO, Dec. 4.—As a result of the decision of the court of appeals at Alexandria, sustaining the judgment of the Egyptian mixed tribunal, declaring that the money taken from the Egyptian reserve for the purposes of the Soudan expedition must be returned, Lord Cromer, British diplomatic agent, has informed the Egyptian government that England will repay to the commissioners of the Caisse the $500,000 advanced by them, together with such other sums to the Egyptian treasury as were required for the purposes of the Dongola expedition. The conditions of the amount of interest and the repayment of the principal are to be settled hereafter.

SHARKEY-FITZSIMMONS.

Sharkey Knocked Out, But Given Decision On a Foul.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 3.—In the prize fight between Robert Fitzsimmons and Thomas Sharkey, the sailor, the fight came to an end in the eighth round, when Fitzsimmons knocked the sailor down and out by a blow on the jaw, followed by another on the chin. Sharkey claimed the fight on a foul, claiming that he was hit in the groin by Fitzsimmons' knee, and the referee so decided. The foul was not seen from the press stand.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4.—The Anglo-California Bank, on which the check for $10,000 was drawn by the National Club, has refused payment on the same. The check was presented by Lynch, Sharkey's backer. The bank officials say they must decline to pay the check until the courts decide that Sharkey was entitled to the money. The bank officials say they are acting on legal advice.

A RETALIATORY MEASURE.

Germany Has Not Been Acting Fair Toward American Products.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The president has issued a proclamation suspending, after January next, the operation of the act which relieves German vessels entering the United States from the payment of tonnage dues and other shipping charges. This action was taken on proof that American vessels are denied corresponding privileges in German ports.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The German government has lodged an energetic protest with the state department against the action of the president in imposing tonnage dues on German ships entering Ameriern ports. The receipt of this protest will be duly acknowledged, but there the matter is likely to rest unless the German government takes steps to remove charges on American shipping, which formed the basis of the president's proclamation.

HAVANA SUBURB BESIEGED.

Insurgents Attacked It and All the Spaniards Were Killed.

HAVANA, Dec. 4.—The insurgent attack on Guanabacoa, a suburb of this city, was much more serious than at first reported. According to insurgent accounts the town was attacked simultaneously at several points, while another insurgent force fired on the Spanish outposts at Bucaramus, on the coast. The garrison of the fort left the place to resist the attack, but was ambuscaded between stone walls and farm fences by 300 insurgents and all the Spaniards were killed. It is admitted that a number of insurgents were killed also. The insurgents are said to have burned seventy-four houses in Guanabacoa.

Seventy-Five Drowned.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The colonial office has received a dispatch from Plymouth, capital of Montserrat, stating that 75 persons of that island perished in the storm.

Literary Notes.

Charles H. Kerr & Co., 56 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, have recently published the authorized American edition of Del Mar's "History of Monetary Systems" in the various states of the world, B. C. 369—A. D. 1895, as drawn from their laws, treaties, mint codes, coins, archæological remains and other authentic sources. Speaking of the work, the London Financial News says: "He who masters Mr. Del Mar's book will know more of monetary systems than 999 men out of a thousand." The New York Herald says: "As an authority on monetary systems this work deserves to rank high. It is in fact an encyclopædia on the subject, and no one who is making a study of this important matter can afford to be without it."

IS A FAILURE THUS FAR.

No Sign of Success for Weyler's Expedition into Pinar del Rio.

KEY WEST, Dec. 5.—Passengers from Havana report that Weyler's campaign in Pinar del Rio so far is a complete failure, despite the fact that he has over 60,000 men in the province. When Weyler left Artemisa he formed a column of 10,000 infantry, 1,500 cavalry and ten pieces of artillery, and marched, skirting the hills on the southern side and seeking an opening to attack Maceo, who is strongly fortified on top of the hills. It appears that Maceo has gathered all his forces and is now entrenched in the hills awaiting Weyler's attack. There is no truth in the report that Maceo has divided his forces into small bands to elude combat, and it is further declared that it is known on good authority that Weyler has no view of meeting Maceo. Gomez, with a large force is reported steadily advancing west. He is now now reported in Santa Clara province, and it is said is coming with 20,000 men.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 7.—A special to the Citizen from Key West says: A Spanish officer who passed through on the Olivette reports that Gen. Maceo with a band of 600 men succeeded in breaking through the trocha and will meet Gen. Gomez in Havana province. Maceo left Gen. Rio Rivero in charge of his forces in Pinar del Rio province. Maceo goes to get the assistance of Gomez to help the insurgent army in Pinar del Rio.

BLOW AT TURKEY.

Alleged Agreement by Which Russia is to Occupy the Hellespont.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The Daily News says that the powers will shortly consider a project having for its object the occupation by Russia of the northwest corner of Turkey, formed by the Bosphorus, which, together with the Hellespont, will become entirely free to the vessels of all nations. The forts along the Hellespont will be dismantled, and the powers will assume the protection of the Hellespont and Constantinople. The paper adds that the project provides for the sultan retiring from the rulership of Turkey.

Philippines Lost to Spain.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—The commander of the German cruiser, Arcona, lying at Manilla, in the Philippines, telegraphs the government that the situation there is critical. Spanish action, he says, is confined to the defense of Cavite and Manilla and an attack is expected daily. Preparations have been made to remove resident foreigners to a place of safety.

BREVITIES.

At Kansas City recently Police officials arrested Jeff Padgett and Albert Ellis, two of the bandits who held up and attempted to rob an Alton express train at Blue Cut, near Independence, on the evening of October 2. Both are about 22 years of age. Evidence against them is conclusive.

Martin Julian recently telegraphed an acceptance of Dan Stuart's offer for a finish fight between Corbett and Fitzsimmons for a $15,000 purse. He has sent a similar telegram to Corbett. Julian says his reasons for accepting this offer in preference to offers for a larger purse is that Fitzsimmons desires a finish fight. Julian believes the fight will be pulled off at Juares.

Dr. Leander S. Jameson has been released from Holioway jail, London, in compliance with the order of the home secretary, Sir Matthew White Ridley. Dr. Jameson underwent a serious operation in the jail on November 1, and the release was ordered on medical grounds. He was sentenced to fifteen months imprisonment on July 28, last, on a charge of violating the neutrality laws in invading the territory of the South African republic.

Dubuque dispatch: The judgment of the Metropolitan Ecclesiastical court of the Roman Catholic church in the famous case of Bishop Bonacum, of Lincoln, Neb., against Fathers Fitzgerald and Murphy, of his diocese, has been delivered. The court finds for the priests against the bishop on every point in the appeal, which was ordered by the propaganda at Rome, after Delegate Satolli had refused to grant one. The bishop is judged to have been actuated by sinister and vindictive motives, to have published falsehoods and deceived Cardinal Satolli. The court declares null and void all the sentences of the bishop, withdrawing the faculties of the defendant priests, sentencing them to pennance in Canada for contumacy and condemning them generally. The bishop is condemned to pay the expenses of the exonerated priests and the costs of the trial, and to pay Father Fitzgerald $875 and Father Murphy $325 as damages, and to withdraw the priests he sent to Tecumseh, Neb., where Father Murphy is rector of St. Ambrose church, and to Auburn, Neb., where Father Fitzgerald is rector of St. Joseph church. The payments are ordered to be made to the court within thirty days. There is no appeal from the sentence pronounced.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE

(CONCLUDED.)

It was not the reputation of the Rev. Silas Ormsby that drew so large an attendance at the little church on the next Sabbath. Curiosity led most of those who wore bonnets and crinoline thither, and it was gratified to the utmost, for in his very first prayer the old gentleman uttered a devout and earnest supplication for the pastor of the congregation, who at that very moment, perhaps, took unto himself the solemn obligation of married life. Might Heaven give him strength, and bless him and his young and pious wife, etc. It was a prayer worth listening to, but the ladies of Appleblow heard nothing after the word wife. They were lost in astonishment; and hurried out of church, after the benediction, with indecent haste, to discuss the affair by their own firesides. And on Monday, when it was known by all that black Betty, the charwoman of the place, was engaged to scrub and scour the parsonage; that an ingrain carpet had been sent down from New York for the parlor floor, and that a tea-set had arrived in a box, marked "this side up, with care," the certainty of the astonishing fact became established, and Appleblow joined in denouncing Mr. Redlaw as a despicable flirt. "And," said the plump mamma of the nine scraggy Misses Fish, "of all men, a minister should blush to earn such a reputation. Nobody would believe the attention he has paid my girls. I couldn't tell which one of 'em he wanted, he was so particular to all of 'em."

Other mammas said much the same, and during the afternoon a procession of "help" might have been seen on the road leading to the cottage, carrying white paper parcels containing principally small volumes—"Practical Piety," "Baxter's Saint's Rest," tracts and hymn-books, presents from Walter Redlaw to the sisters of his flock, now returned with indignation. The excitement lasted all the week, and was still strong on the next Sabbath when the minister walked up the church aisle with a beautiful girl upon his arm, and the Appleblow girls looked upon a face so exquisite that none of them could resort to the usual course of declaring her "not the least good-looking."

They were decorous and prudent in Appleblow, and all the forms of courtesy were gone through with. The new minister's wife was invited out to tea, was called upon by the ladies of her flock, and was favored with a donation party; neverthless, there was little cordial feeling in Appleblow. The ladies did not take kindly to their pastor's wife and soon the clouds began to gather. At first, in secret whispers, Mrs. Redlaw's bonnet was too gay, she was frivolous, not a good housekeeper, not zealous in good works. By-and-by louder, more serious fault-finding, not only with the minister's wife, but with the minister himself.

The women began it; the men were talked over by their wives; finally the first step was taken. 'Squire Gorse and his family gave up their pew, and found themselves more edified by the Baptist clergyman in the next village; others followed their example. The fault-finding and slander reached the parsonage itself and little Rosa Redlaw, with her head upon her husband's shoulder, sobbed: "What shall I do, Walter? I meant to help you, and to make them all like me, and you see how it is."

And the young clergyman soothed his weaping wife and bade her have good cheer, for matters would mend, and all would be right again. He was mistaken; matters did not mend; they grew worse and worse; and, a year from the date of his marriage, came to a climax. A bevy of trustees waited upon him in his study, and bemoaned their wrongs. They paid a large salary; they expected the pastor to do his part, and he lost them money—absolutely had emptied the church, instead of filling it. Besides, his wife should have been instructed in her duty. She had made herself generally disliked; if the minister's wife was not popular, it was a very unpleasant thing. Could he explain?

Of course the visit ended as they expected; there was but one consummation possible; Appleblow knew, in a day or so, that their pastor was about to leave the place forever.

The winter had set in—an unhealthy winter, warm and moist, instead of cold and bracing. Rumors of prevailing ill health spread over Appleblow, and the minister packing his books in his study, came to hear of them. They grew louder. Whole families of children sickened and lay low, and a dread cry arose—"It is the smallpox!"

One day Walter Redlaw left his home to perform the burial service over the graves of three children of one family. The next their mother called him to the bedside of her husband, to see him also die. And with these deaths, the horrors of that time, never to be forgotten by any who dwelt there, then began in earnest.

Men, women, and children sickened with the loathsome pestilence. Horror seized those yet unsmitten, and they fled. Appleblow became a great lazarhouse, and Walter Redlaw said to his young wife: "Let us go quickly, dear one, before the scourge falls upon our household."

But she, as she spoke, left her seat, and knelt before him, resting her head upon his breast, as he still sat before their evening fire, in a child-like fashion, all her own, and, as he sheltered her upon his bosom, whispered: "My husband, do not bid me go, for I must stay here and do all I can—watch with them, nurse them, strive to comfort the bereaved. I should indeed be all they think of me, if I, their pastor's wife, fled at such an hour."

The man listened at first unconvinced. "We owe them nothing," he said; "they have used us shamefully. Remember, I am actually their pastor no longer."

But his wife gently pleaded; pleaded to stay midst the danger, to aid him in the duties which would fall to him amidst the sick and dying; and, touching his heart and soul by her sweet Christian spirit, brought him at last to say: "You shall have it as you choose, Rosa; we will stay amidst this hard, heathened-hearted people in their hour of trial; but, God sparing us, we will leave them when it is over, and go elsewhere."

And Rosa Redlaw rejoiced and thanked him. But bye-and-bye a natural womanly dread came into her heart, and she looked at him with tears in her dark eyes. "Walter," she whispered, blushing as she spoke, "you have often called me beautiful. Should I lose that beauty, could you love me still? Should this pestilence, falling upon me, scar and mar my face, would I be as dear to you? Speak truly, darling."

But he had no need to speak, for she read the constancy and purity of his love in the one long look he gave her, and sobbed upon his shoulder—"Nay, then, I shall have no fear."

At dawn the two went forth upon their mission.

In their selfish horror, kinsfolk fled from each other. Sisters shrunk from those who had been nursed at the same breast, children deserted their parents, friends grew brutal to each other; but those two young creatures never swerved from their appointed task; like ministering angels, they went from house to house, aiding the overtasked physician, supporting the mother's failing courage, coming to the lonely and deserted in their greatest need. Sometimes they were together, but more frequently apart, there was so much to do. When they could, they met at night in the old parsonage; but often dying couches or sick beds, where lives hung in the balance, kept them separated for several days. But their hearts and prayers followed each other always.

It was a trying time, but they were very brave and faithful. Some of those who had been most cruel to Rosa Redlaw were her patients now, and lay helpless as infants while she fanned the flickering flame of life within their bosoms.

When, save for her, no friend had watched beside the couch of loathsome disease; when in the death-room, pestilence-haunted, she sat all night and watched; when her own hands robed the dead infant for its last sleep, and it was known to all what mission she had taken upon herself, wonder filled the village, and in a little while there arose to Heaven so many prayers for Rosa Redlaw and her husband that, had the Mohammedan belief been true, they need have had no dread of the "burning path," it must have been paved so thickly.

And in time, though that day was slow in coming, the pestilence began to abate, and health came to Appleblow again, with the sharp frosts and keen cold air of the Christmas time. On Christmas day joy-bells were rung from the steeples in Appleblow, to tell the people that the rod was lifted.

But before night sad news ran through the village. She who had watched with them, who had been so tender and so faithful, who had passed through those fearful scenes when the pestilence was at its worst, as though she wore a charmed life, was smitten, now that she was no longer needed.

The shutters of the parsonage were closed, the windows darkened, silence as of death reigned throughout its rooms, for the angel of the house lay trembling on the margin of the grave. Another pastor preached this Sabbath in Appleblow, and all knew well why he was there. Walter Redlaw watched beside his darling's bed, and never left it day or night.

Penitential tears fell in Appleblow that Sabbath; prayers went up to Heaven for the pastor's fair young wife, and the angels heard them, and heard also those of the young husband, and bore them through the gates of Heaven, and sang them to celestial music at the foot of the Throne, telling how good she was, and how true, and so fit for heaven that it were a mercy to less perfect mortals to let her stay on earth.

And the Most High listened. The death angel's wings flung their shadow on the portal of the parsonage, but did not pass it; and, pale and feeble, but with life still strong in her young breast, for she clung to her husband with all a woman's earnestness, and loved earth for his sake, Rosa Redlaw lay at last free from the burning fever, certain to live—so the old doctor said, with tears in his gray eyes.

But was she sure of her soft, child-like beauty, of her pearly skin, of her golden hair, of her bright blue eyes? God alone could tell. But Walter, bending over her, thought of the promise he had made her on the day when she entered on her task of peril and self-denial, and knew, knowing how dear she was to him, that no change in his darling's beauty could change his love.

And into the darkened room, health came, bringing balm; and the sun shone in again, and the soft air breathed through the lattice, and the birds sang in their golden cages and the housemaid in her kitchen, where she made dainty messes for the convalescent; and there came a Sabbath at last when Rosa was well enough to go to church with her husband.

Appleblow knew it, and the church was full, and out upon the grass in the church-yard groups were gathered, girls and boys, young married couples, old foks who had seen their grandchildren grow to be men and women and die. And, waiting in the morning sunlight of a pleasant winter day, they saw their pastor coming along the frost-hardened road with his wife upon his arm. They came nearer, and they saw how frail her form had grown; but still her veil was down, and they could not see her face until standing amongst them, she put it back, and then—yes, breaths were held, and all eyes riveted upon those features; and there was a hush, unbroken, until a child's voice, clear as dropping silver, arose upon the air: "Oh, mother, look; the lady is just as beautiful as ever." And then, though it was Sunday, and in New England, and beside a church, a cheer arose upon the air, and men tossed their caps on high, and women sobbed; she sobbed also, beautiful Rosa Redlaw, thanking God for all his love, and thanking Him also, as a woman must, that He had not taken from her the charms in which her husband took such tender pride, and of which, for his sake more than for her own, she was also just a little proud, though she had laid that pride aside, knowing well her danger, when she went forth upon her mission.

They never spoke against the minister's wife after that in Appleblow. Amongst them she lived and moved as might some loving queen, and dwelt in the old parsonage, beautified as the temple of some saint might have been, until her youth changed to maturity and her maturity to age; and there you may see her yet, and her husband also, though his hair, like hers, is of frosted silver. And his grandson fills the pulpit, for Appleblow loves the race of Redlaw, and will not part with them.

Great Tide Waves.

Those who see the rise and fall of the tides in our Atlantic harbors seldom think of the wonderful career of the moon-raised ocean-waves which cause the tidal flux and reflux. Such billows not only cross the sea, but flow from ocean to ocean, and in this way complicated movements are set going. Thus, as Mr. Vaughan Cornish has recently reminded English readers, once in every twelve hours the moon raises a tide billow in the southern Indian Ocean. When this billow passes the Cape of Good Hope, at noon, its successor is already born, and by the time the first billow has reached the Azores Islands, at midnight, the second is rounding the Cape, and a third has come into existence in the southern ocean. By 4 o'clock in the morning following its passage of the Cape the tide billow reaches the English Channel and there the shallow water delays it so much that it does not arrive at the Straits of Dover until 10 a. m. Here the narrowing Channel causes the tide to rise very high and almost puts an end to the wave. In the meantime another branch of the billow runs around the western side of the British Islands, rounds the north point of Scotland, and moves slowly down the eastern coast of England, until it finally flows up the Thames and laps the wharves of London.

Prolific Birds.

More than 40,000 sparrows have been destroyed in Gratiot county, Michigan, during the past twelve months, as shown by the bounties paid, but the birds appear to be as numerous as ever. One man makes a good income as a sparrow hunter, collecting an average of $60 a month in bounties.

Early Christians.

American pioneers were God fearing and Bible loving. They staked out town lots in 22 Bethels, 10 Jordans, 9 Jerichos, 14 Bethlehems, 22 Goshens, 21 Shilohs, 11 Carmels, 18 Tabors and Mount Tabors, 22 Zions and Mount Zions, 26 Edens, 30 Lebanons, 26 Hebrews and 36 Sharons.

TERRIBLE FLOODS.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Threatened With Dire Disaster.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Dec. 2.—The situation is growing more serious momentarily. The ice gorge which formed six miles down the river has backed into the city. An immense volume of water from above is inundating a large portion of the town, and all merchants in the city are moving to places of safety. Water has filled the basements of the business blocks almost the entire length of Bridge street. It is expected to soon reach the court house, eight blocks from the river. Fifty families which had taken refuge in empty houses, without food or warmth, have been rescued. Bridge Superintendent Callaghan, of the Central road, is instructed to blast out the gorge, but says all the dynamite manufactured could not budge it. The water is rising at the rate of a foot an hour. It looks as though the entire town will be inundated. The business men have removed their goods from their stores. Thirty persons are reported drowned by the floods near Durant. Great loss exists among domestic animals.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Dec. 4.—"The river is falling at the rate of a foot per day and there is no reason whatever for apprehension," said W. A. Jones, U. S. A., who had put in a busy day investigating the situation along the Chippewa river. Col. Jones, who is in charge of the government engineering works in the northwest, has been called by the local authorities, who sought expert advice in what seemed like an extremity and a critical situation. The bed of the Chippewa river from Eau Claire to Chippewa Falls, a distance of fifteen miles, is a frozen mass of logs, ice and driftwood, and it is believed it will remain until spring. The water flows on either side of the old channel

CUBANS CAPTURE GUAMARO.

Splendid Victory Accomplished by Garcia's Army.

New York dispatch: President Palma, of the Cuban junta, has received a letter from the camp of Gen. Calixto Garcia, giving details of the capture of Guamaro by the insurgents. The letter says that not only did Garcia's army capture the town, but enough arms and ammunition to fit out 400 recruits. Gen. Garcia's forces numbered nearly 5,000 men. He made a desperate attack on the fort, using the two cannon which the insurgents had with good effect. He drove the Spanish troops from their position and occupied the town, which was later destroyed by the torch. In the battle 180 Spaniards were taken prisoners and a large quantity of arms and ammunition captured. Gen. Garcia says that his men have not suffered from the yellow fever and are in first-class condition.

SIX HUNDRED POISONED.

A Baker Sells Bread Which Has Been Mixed With Arsenic.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 5.—A case of wholesale poisoning occurred in Milwaukee, resulting in the serious illness of about 100 families, numbering between 500 and 600 persons, living in the northwestern part of the city. The cause of the sickness was traced to bread sold at a bakery owned by Otto Figlesthaler, which has a large trade. An analysis of the bread showed that it contained arsenic. The 600 persons poisoned are living, but a large number of the cases are considered serious if not critical. The police are convinced that arsenic was placed in the bread with intent to cause the death or serious illness of Figlesthaler's customers, with the object of destroying his business.

ENORMOUS DEPOSITS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The New York Financier says: For the first time since December 28, 1895, the deposits of the New York clearing house banks exceed $500,000,000, the bank statement for last year showing a total deposit of $502,046,000, or an increase since November 7 last of $63,608,400. In other words the gain has been at the rate of $15,900,000 per week since the Monday following the election. This record, it is unnecessary to say, has never been surpassed in the history of New York banks.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior Made.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The annual report of Secretary of the Interior Francis has been made public. It deals with the affairs of the various branches of the interior department during the past year, and makes a number of important recommendations. It proposes a solution of the vexed problem of the bond aided roads, deals exhaustively with the pension administration, reviews the progress of the Dawes commission negotiations and touches upon matters of especial significance in the west.

DOCKERS' STRIKE SPREADING.

All Classes of Workmen May Become Involved.

HAMBURG, Dec. 1.—The great strike here has extended to the employes of the grain warehouses. The stock dockers and warehouse unions have decided to refuse to discharge the cargoes of Hamburg vessels which have been loaded by non-union men. The dockers at Lehe, Bremerhaven, Geestemunde and Nordenham have decided to refuse to unload vessels to be discharged at the lower Weser ports on account of the strike. The river engineers have also joined the strikers.

BERLIN, Dec. 2.—The United Trades representatives passed a resolution assuring the Hamburg strikers of the solid support of the working men of Berlin, promising them financial aid. They agreed to prevent the departure of men from this city to take the places of the strikers.

HAMBURG, Dec. 3.—At a meeting attended by 8,000 strikers, resolutions were adopted providing for acceptance on behalf of the strikers of a proposition for a settlement of their differences with employers by a court of arbitration, composed of representatives of the employers, employes and others who are disinterested. The employers' union unanimously rejected the proposal.

HAMBURG, Dec. 5.—At a meeting of the central strike committee it was decided to call a general strike. A call has been issued to all dock laborers, engineers, bargemen, lumpers and carmen to quit work in order to bring the business of the port to a complete standstill. A majority of the dock laborers obeyed the call and the remainder will quickly follow.

BOLD BRITISH PLANS.

Advance On Khartoum From Dongola to Begin in March.

London dispatch: England will reconquer the Soudan, overthrow the authority of the khalifa and restore the authority of the khedive from the Nile delta to the great lakes. General Sir Herbert Kitchener, after daily conference for a fortnight with the officials of the war office here, has gone back to Cairo with instructions from Lord Salisbury to have everything in readiness for the Anglo-Egyptian Nile expedition to advance from Dongola to Berber and Khartoum in March next. The foreign office officials have reason to believe that France will no longer resist the proposal of the Anglo-Egyptian government to draw on the Caisee of the Egyptian public debt for the full expense of the undertaking. Evidently M. Hanotaux has received pledges from London to remove his long standing objections. What their nature is only the future will reveal. The original attitude of the French government and bondholders was one of apparently implacable hostility to any such arrangement. Kitchener's military rivals have sought in vain for a sound criticism of his conduct up to this point. The talk of superseding him by an older and more experienced officer came to nothing. He will continue to command. Thus far he has managed the campaign with remarkable ability. To have superseded him would have been a piece of rank injustice and folly. Lord Salisbury never entertained the thought for a moment.

WEST INDIAN CYCLONE.

Great Estates Wiped Out by Flood.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Dec. 4.—A cyclone, accompanied by heavy floods, has swept the eastern part of West Indies, causing great loss of life. The St. Vincent and Montserrat estates have been completely wiped out. The islands of Trinidad and Barbadoes have also been flooded, causing immense damage, but no loss of life has been reported.

IOWA PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

DES MOINES, Dec. 3.—S. P., of Leland, Iowa, asks, "Is there any law or decision to prevent any person from making and using a patented article for himself only, although he have not got permission of the owner?" Yes. A patent gives the owner the exclusive right to make, vend and use the invention for seventeen years. No person has a right to make and use a patented invention for his own use without license. If one person could do so every other person would have the same privilege, and a patent for an invention that can be easily made would go into general use without profit to the patentee. A patent has been allowed to F. W. Stevens, of Sac City, Ia., for a hose nozzle adapted for throwing a straight solid stream, a radiating spray or sheet all around, a spray and solid stream at the same time, or a spray only half way around, at the pleasure of the operator. Valuable information about obtaining, valuing and selling patents sent free to any address.

Talmage's Sermon

Employments of Heaven. . . . .

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6, 1896.—Dr. Talmage's sermon to-day gives a very unusual view of the celestial world, and is one of the most unique discourses of the great preacher. The text is Ezekiel 1: 1: "Now it came to pass in the thirtiets year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives of the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened."

Ezekiel, with others, had been expatriated and while in foreign slavery, was standing on the banks of the royal canal which he and other serfs had been condemned to dig by the order of Nebuchadnezzar—this royal canal in the text called the river of Chebar—the illustrious exile had visions of heaven. Indeed, it is almost always so, that the brightest visions of heaven come not to those who are on mountain-top of prosperity, but to some John on desolate Patmos, or to some Paul in Mamertine dungeon, or to some Ezekiel standing on the banks of a ditch he had been compelled to dig—yea, to the weary, to the heart-broken, to those whom sorrow has banished. The text is very particular to give us the exact time of the vision. It was in the thirtieth year, and in the fourth month, and in the fifth day of the month. So you have had visions of earth you shall never forget. You remember the year, you remember the month, you remember the day, you remember the hour. Why may we not have some such vision now, and it be in the twelfth month, and in sixth day of the month?

The question is often silently asked, though perhaps never audibly propounded, "What are our departed Christian friends doing now?" The question is more easily answered than you might perhaps suppose. Though there has come no recent intelligence from the heavenly city, and we seem dependent upon the story of eighteen centuries ago, still I think we may from strongest inference decide what are the present occupations of our transferred kinsfolk. After God has made a nature he never eradicates the chief characteristic of its temperament. You never knew a man phlegmatic in temperament to become sanguine in temperament. You never knew a man sanguine in temperament to become phlegmatic in temperament. Conversion plants new principles in the soul, but Paul and John are just as different from each other after conversion as they were different from each other before conversion. If conversion does not eradicate the prominent characteristics of temperament, neither will death eradicate them. Paul and John are as different from each other in heaven as they were different from each other in Asia Minor.

You have then only by a sum in subtraction and a sum in addition to decide what are the employments of your departed friends in the better world. You are to subtract from them all earthly drossness and add all earthly goodness, and then you are to come to the conclusion that they are doing now in heaven what in their best moment they did on earth. The reason why so many people never start for heaven is because they could not stand it if they got there if it should turn out to be the rigid and formal place some people photograph it. We like to come to church, but we would not want to stay here till next summer. We like to hear the "Hallelujah Chorus," but we would not want to hear it all the time for fifty centuries. It might be on some great occasion, it would be possibly comfortable to wear a crown of gold weighing several pounds, but it would be an affliction to wear such a crown forever. In other words, we run the descriptions of heaven into the ground while we make that which was intended as especial and celebrative to be the exclusive employment in heaven. You might as well, if asked to describe the habits of American society, describe a Decoration Day, or a Fourth of July, or an autumnal Thanksgiving, as though it were all the time that way.

I am not going to speculate in regard to the future world, but I must, by inevitable laws of inference and deduction and common sense, conclude that in heaven we will be just as different from each other as we are now different, and hence that there will be at least as many different employments in the celestial world as there are employments here. Christ is to be the great love, the great joy, the great rapture, the great worship of heaven, but will that abolish employments? No more than love on earth—paternal, filial, fraternal, conjugal love, abolishes earthly occupation.

In the first place, I remark that all those of our departed Christian friends, who, on earth, found great joy in the fine arts, are now indulging their tastes in the same direction. On earth they had their gladdest pleasures amid pictures and statuary, and in the study of the laws of light and shade and perspective. Have you any idea that that affluence of faculty at death collapsed and perished? Why so, when there is more for them to look at and they have keener appreciation of the beautiful, and they stand amid the very looms where the sunsets and the rainbows and the spring mornings are woven? Are you so obtuse as to suppose that because the painter drops his easel and the sculptor his chisel, and the engraver his knife, that therefore that taste, which he was enlarging and intensifying for forty or fifty years, is entirely obliterated? These artists, or these friends of art on earth worked in coarse material and with imperfect brain and with frail hand. Now they have carried their art into larger liberties and into wider circumference. They are at their old business yet, but without the fatigues, without the limitations, without the hindrances of the terrestrial studio. Raphael could improve upon his masterpiece of "Michael the Archangel," now that he has seen him, and could improve upon his masterpiece of the "Holy Trinity," now that he has visited them. Michael Angelo could better present the "Last Judgment" after he had seen its flash and heard the rumbling battering-rams of its thunder. Exquisite colors here, graceful lines here, powerful chiaroscuro here, but I am persuaded that the grander studies and the brighter galleries are higher up, by the winding marble stairs of the sepulchre, and that Turner and Holman Hunt, and Rembrandt, and Titian, and Pasl Veronese, if they exercised saving faith in the Christ whom they portrayed upon the canvas, are painting yet, but their strength of faculty multiplied ten thousandfold. Their hand has forgotten its cunning, but the spirit has faculties as far superior to four fingers and a thumb as the supernatural is superior to the human. The reason that God took away their eye and their hand and their brain was that he might give them something more limber, more wieldly, more skilfhl, more multipliant. Do not, therefore, be melancholy among the tapestries, and the bric-a-brac, and the embroideries, and the water-colors, and the works of art which your departed friends used to admire. Do not say, "I am so sorry they had to leave all these things." Rather say, "I am glad they have gone up to higher artistic opportunity and appreciation." Our friends who found so much joy in the fine arts on earth are now luxuriating in Louvres and Luxembourgs celestial.

Again, I remark that those of our departed Christian friends, who in this world had very strong military spirit, are now in armies celestial and out in bloodless battle. There are hundreds of people born soldiers. They cannot help it. They belong to regiments in time of peace. They cannot hear a drum or a fife without trying to keep step to the music. They are Christian, and, when they fight, they fight on the right side. Now, when these, our Christian friends who had natural and powerful military spirit, entered heaven, they entered the celestial army. The door of heaven scarcely opens but you hear a military demonstration. David cried out, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand." Elisha saw the mountains filled with celestial cavalry. St. John said, "The armies which are in heaven followed him on white horses." Now, when those who had the military spirit on earth sanctified entered glory, I suppose they right away enlisted in some heavenly campaign; they volunteered right away. There must needs be in heaven soldiers with a soldierly spirit. There are grand parade days when the King reviews the troops. There must be armed escort sent out to bring up from earth to heaven those who were more than conquerors. There must be crusades ever being fitted out for some part of God's dominion—battles, bloodless, groanless, painless. Angels of evil to be fought down and fought out. Other rebellious worlds to be conquered. Worlds to be put to the torch. Worlds to be saved. Worlds to be demolished. Worlds to be sunk. Worlds to be hoisted. Beside that in our own world there are battles for the right and against the wrong where we must have the heavenly military. That is what keeps us Christian reformers so buoyant. So few good men against so many bad men, so few churches against so many grogshops, so many pure printing presses against so many polluted printing presses, and yet we are buoyant and courageous, because while we know that the armies of evil in the world are larger in numbers than the army of truth, there are celestial cohorts in the air fighting on our side. I have not so much faith in the army on the ground as I have in the army in the air. O God, open our eyes that we may see them; the military spirits that went up from earth to join the military spirits before the throne—Joshua and Caleb, and Gideon, and David, and Samson, and the hundreds of Christian warriors who on earth fought with fleshy arm, and now having gone up on high are coming down the hills of heaven ready to fight among the invisibles. Our departed Christian friends, who had the military spirit in them sanctified, are in the celestial army. Whether belonging to the artillery or the cavalry or the infantry, I know not. I only know that they have started out for fleet service, and courageous service, and everlasting service. Perhaps they may come this way to fight on our side, and drive sin, and meanness, and Satan from all our hearts. Yonder they are coming, coming. Did you hear them as they swept by?

But what are the men of the law, who in this world found their chief joy in the legal profession—what are they doing now? Studying law in a universe where everything is controlled by law from the flight of humming-bird to flight of world—law, not dry and hard and drudging, but righteous and magnificent law, before which man and cherub, and seraph, and archangel, and God himself bow. The chain of law long enough to wind around the immensities, and infinity, and eternity, Chain of law. What a place to study law, where all the links of the chain are in the hand!

What are our departed Christian friends who in this world had their joy in the healing art doing now? Busy at their old business. No sickness in heaven, but plenty of sickness on earth, plenty of wounds in the different parts of God's dominion to be healed and to be medicated. Those glorious souls coming down, not in lazy doctor's gig, but with lightning locomotion. You canot understand why that patient got well after all the skillful doctors had said he must die. Perhaps Abercrombie touched him—Abercrombie, who, after many years doctoring the bodies and the souls of people in Scotland, went up to God in 1844. Perhaps Abercrombie touched him. I should not wonder if my old friend Dr. John Brown, who died in Edinburgh—John Brown, the author of "Rab and His Friends"—John Brown, who was as humble a Christian as he was a skilful physician and world-renowned author; I should not wonder if he had been back again to see some of his old patients. Those who had their joy in healing the sickness and the woes of earth, gone up to heaven, are come forth again for benignant medicament.

But what are our departed Christian friends who in all departments of usefulness were busy, finding their chief joy in doing good—what are they doing now? Going right on with the work. John Howard visiting dungeons; the dead women of Northern and Southern battlefields still abroad looking for the wounded; George Peabody still watching the poor; Thomas Clarkson still looking after the enslaved—all of those who did good on earth busier since death than before. The tombstone not the terminus but the starting-post. What are our departed Christian friends who found their chief joy in studying God, doing now? Studying God yet. No need of revelation now, for unblanched they are face to face. Now they can handle the omnipotent thunderbolts, just as a child handles the sword of a father come back from victorious battle. They have no sin; no fear, consequently. Studying Christ, not through a revelation save the revelation of the scars—that deep lettering which brings it all up quick enough. Studying the Christ of the Bethlehem caravansary; the Christ of the awful massacre with its hemorrhage of head, and hand, and foot, and side; the Christ of the shattered mausoleum; Christ the Sacrifice, the Star, the Son, the Man, the God, the God-man, the man-God. But hark! the bell of the cathedral rings—the cathedral bell of heaven. What is the matter now? There is going to be a great meeting in the temple. Worshippers all coming through the aisles. Make room for the Conqueror. Christ standing in the temple. All heaven gathering around him. Those who loved the beautiful, come to look at the Rose of Sharon. Those who loved music, come to listen to his voice. Those who were mathematicians, come to count the years of his reign. Those who were explorers, come to discover the height and the depth and the length and the breadth of his love. Those who had the military spirit on earth sanctified, and the military spirit in heaven, come to look at the Captain of their salvation. The astronomers come to look at the Morning Star. The men of the law come to look at him who is the judge of quick and dead. The men who healed the sick come to look at him who was wounded for our transgressions. All different and different forever in many respects, yet all alike in admiration for Christ, in worship for Christ, and all alike in joining in the doxology: "Unto him who washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God; to him be glory in the church throughout all ages, world without end." Amen.

To show you that your departed friends are more alive than they ever were, to make you homesick for heaven, to give you an enlarged view of the glories to be revealed, I have preached this sermon.

The man who robs another of his right, loses most by the transaction.

NELSON'S FAMOUS SIGNAL.

"England Expects Every Man to Do His Duty."

At the United Services institute, Whitehall, at which relics connected with Trafalgar and Nelson are to be exhibited, there is a time-stained document, framed, and hung on the western wall, from which it appears that the famous signal "England expects every man to do his duty," was not wholly Nelson's, says St. James' Gazette. Lieut. Pasco, who was responsible for the signaling on the admiral's ship, makes the following statement: "His lordship came to me on the poop and, after ordering certain signals to be made, about a quarter to noon, said: 'Mr. Pasco, I want to say to the fleet: "England confides that every man will do his duty."' He added: 'You must be quick, for I have one more to add, which is for close action.' I replied: 'If your lordship will permit me to substitute "expects" for "confides" the signal will soon be completed, because the word "expects" is in the vocabulary and "confides" must be spelt.' His lordship replied in haste and in seeming satisfaction: 'That will do, Pasco; make it directly.' As the last hoist was handed down Nelson turned to Capt. Blackwood, who was standing by him, with: 'Now I can do no more. We must trust to the great Disposer of all events and the justice of our cause. I thank God for this great opportunity of doing my duty.' When Lord Nelson's message had been answered by a few ships in the van he ordered me to make signal for close action and keep it up. Accordingly I hoisted No. 16 at the topgallant masthead and there it remained until shot away." Such, then, is the duly sworn and attested statement of Nelson's flag lieutenant which he gave to Col. Baylis, Q. C., who presented it to the museum.

BREAD STORIES.

The Breton Peasant Believes in the Power of Crumbs.

It is supposable that bread, homemade or baker's, being free from adulterations, would be a singularly simple and honest substance and therefore have no power in regard to the evil eye, but it seems that it has, says the New York Times. Nothing can be more beautiful than the act of the Breton peasant who, before cutting his loaf, makes the sign of the cross on it. If he stopped there, expressing his thankfulness for food, that would be well, but superstition carries him much farther. If a child is born to him, a crumb of that bread, especially if it be rye bread, is put into the infant's sleeve and then the chances of the baby's having the colic are diminished. If a cow shows signs of sickness or a horse is lame a crumb of the bread is supposed to benefit the animal. In Bavaria, when you go into the woods, especially that portion infested by spirits, only put a crust of bread in your mouth and no ghost, spirite or witch can trouble you. Somehow many retain an idea of the peculiar sanctity of bread. For instance, it is all right to leave a bit of meat on your plate, but it is wicked to leave a piece of bread. Very good fathers and mothers inculcate that idea and little children believe then that there is something particularly sacred about bread which a potato does not possess, and this is sheer nonsense. All waste is to be avoided, but there is no more special goodness in bread than [illegible] in a sausage.

A Student's Joke.

J. E. Dodson, the actor, is an Englishman. "When I was at school at Harrow," he said to a reporter, "Campanini, then in the height of his fame as a tenor, sang for the first time in the city in Italian opera. If I mistake not, it was Trovatore. At the end of Campanini's great aria in the third act there was a storm of applause. All the front seats in the balcony were occupied by students, and it was noticed that an almost invisible wire was strung from the middle point in the gallery horse-shoe to the top of the prompter's box at the middle of the stage. What caused most people to notice the wire was the sudden appearance on it of a floral car of huge dimensions, over which hovered on spirals several stuffed doves. The car rode gradually down along the wire until it was in full view of everybody. Campanini's face was wreathed in smiles. He bowed now with his right, and again with his left hand on his chest. As the car approached the prompter's box the singer moved forward to remove it from its trolley. Then there was the keen zest of the occasion. Not only was there one wire, there were two. The second was attached to the car, and also to the hand of a particularly stalwart undergraduate. With marvelous rapidity the car shot back to the balcony. The smiles, I may add, did not tarry on Campanini's face."—Boston Transcript.

Winter Time Table.

No trains were taken off by the Great Northern Railway in making up its winter schedule; but changes were made in the leaving time of several of them, the most important being the Pacific coast train, which leaves at 1 p. m., two hours earlier than heretofore, giving closer connections with eastern lines than ever before and reaching Montana and coast points in daylight.

Excellent Farming Lands

A Good Fruit and Farming Region Now Being Settled.

This tract of land lies in the Eastern part of Colorado County and Northern part of Wharton County, Texas, about fifty miles west of Houston, the great commercial center of the state. The soil is a rich, productive sandy loam. This district in Texas has plenty of rainfall for crops, and one of the necessities in order to secure a good farm is to have land that lays smoothly and has high enough altitude for perfect drainage, which can be secured in this tract, as it is a smooth rolling prairie, lying on the divide between the San Bernardo and Colorado Rivers.

This district has a mild, delightful climate, enabling you to produce something almost each month in the year. Another great advantage is that through this tract there are two lines of railroads, and within the limits of this tract, which is twelve miles North and South, and eight miles East and West, there are two towns located, one on each road, which gives special advantages to any farmer locating there.

We anticipate that you desire to invest in lands for a farm and home, where the prices are low, the terms easy, and where you can purchase and pay for the land in three or four years, as cheaply as you are now paying rent.

We run excursions to the lands over the C., R. I. & P. to Ft. Worth, and from there over the Santa Fe to Wallis, Texas. We secure you the lowest rates and will accompany you. Write to us for our book, "Fertile Farm Lands," excursion rates, dates and how to get is a disease which afflicts over 75 per cent. of the American people. It is a dangerous disease because it not only poisons the blood but causes heaviness, oppression, and dulls the intellect. Then follow chronic headache, loss of appetite, slow digestion, nervousness, bad breath, dingy complexion and low spirits. It will eventually bring on liver and kidney disease in some incurable form. But sufferers from this dreaded malady are speedily

ENJOYMENT FOR TWO.

They Were Cougars, and the Man With Them Was Anything but Happy.

A. J. Johnson, of Portland, a well-known forestry collector, while on his way back from a visit of inspection with H. S. Graves, of New York, one of the United States Forestry Commission's experts, to the Blue Mountains, in eastern Oregon, had an experience with two cougars at Meacham that he is not likely to forget for some time. He had stopped over at Grandma Munra's, and, in the afternoon, went on a botanical excursion into the neighboring hills. On his return he selected the railroad track, which wound along the bottom of the gully, as a preferable route. The track was paralleled by a stream for a good way, and Mr. Johnson was making his way along this section, swinging a sack full of roots, and thinking of various things, when he was startled to notice that he had companions—two big cougars walking a few feet ahead of him in the bed of the stream. One of them was lame, probably the result of some trouble with a trap and he and his mate trotted along slowly. They had noticed Mr. Johnson, and apparently were aware of the fact that he had noticed them, for every little while they would swish their tails in a playful way over the surface of the water and throw a backward glance of the eye at the lonely pedestrian on the railroad track that suggested unpleasant things to him. It was not exactly a very comfortable situation for an unarmed man to be in, with two great tawny cats walking along at his side. He wanted very much to turn around and go back and look for more roots, but he did not exactly like to do so for fear his action might be misunderstood by his companions and cause them to take more interest in his person than they were then doing. The fact that they seemed anything but plump was not reassuring. During the quarter of a mile that the forestry collector and the cougars were in such close companionship the cougars seemed to be enjoying their walk, and Mr. Johnson was wishing that it was the same with him. Finally, to his relief, they broke off up the hillside at a swinging trot, stopping every now and then to take a look at the unsociable man back on the track, who was now vigorously shaking his bagful of roots at them.—Morning Oregonian.

A Green-Goods Game.

Not long since some "green goods" circulars were received by some gentlemen in a town not far from Bangor. They were enterprising men, too; they made their money by figuring and they just did a little reasoning in this case. A few days later a dispatch was forwarded according to directions and in due course of time a reply was received by mail giving them further particulars in regard to the remarkably good imitations that the green goods men had to offer. The bait took, as they intended it should, and the two men received a nice new dollar and no amount of scrutiny would fail in showing that it was in every way as good as a treasury note, for in effect it was a government bill. The money was, of course, pocketed and circulars were solicited from other townsmen and the racket worked until each man was $10 or more ahead of the game, when for some reason or other requests for "samples" were not honored by the New York dealers in cheap currency. The idea may have possibly dawned on the New Yorkers that the returns did not admit of further investment in that town.—Bangor Commercial.

Making Money.

He ground his teeth. Usually a jocund and gay sort of man, to-day he seemed to be jollier than ever. There was a merry smile upon his face and ever and anon he whistled in a low tone the airs from the latest popular opera. None of them has been very popular lately but he was easily pleased. He ground his teeth. Near him sat a man with head thrown back as if inhaling the freshness of the morning air or something like that. The face of that man wore a look of concentrated agony, though he had breathed the spirit of laughter. But the first man thought of the good money he was making and ground his teeth. Then he smiled happily and shook the other by the shoulder. "Now," he remarked, "I'll put the gold cap on to-morrow at the same hour and you can go away till then. Hurt you any?" The man whose teeth had been ground gave vent to a savage expletive. "Hurt me any?" he repeated, with a snarl. "Why the deuce didn't you give me more laughing gas?" But the dentist pocketed the $5 and only smiled inscrutably.—New York World.

The Proper Pride.

"Poor fellow," said the philanthropical passer-by, sympathetically, as he looked over the fence at the wild-haired man who was galloping around the yard astride of a broomstick, which he caused to prance and pitch till it finally bucked him off on his head. "So you lost your wager?"

"You fool!" shrieked the man addressed, indignantly, as he picked himself up, "I am not paying an election bet—I'm crazy!"

A WOMAN'S STORY.

It Should Be of Interest to Every Thinking Woman.

Women who reason well know that no male physician can understandingly treat the complaint known as "female diseases," for no man ever experienced them.

This, Lydia E. Pinkham taught them twenty years ago, when she discovered in her Vegetable Compound the only successful cure for all those ailments peculiar to the sex. Many women have a fatal faith in their physician, and not till they can suffer no longer, will they think and act for themselves.

The following testimony is straight to the point, and represents the experience of hundreds of thousands of now grateful women: "For six years I was a great sufferer from those internal weaknesses so prevalent among our sex. After having received treatment from four physicians of our city, and finding no relief whatever, I concluded to try Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has proved a boon to me. It can truly be called a "Saviour of Women."—MRS. B. A. PERHAM, Waynesboro, Pa.

FIGS AND THISTLES.

The sin of a moment may blight the whole life.

God never made anything too small for his use.

PENCIL POINTS.

People usually pick out their own temptations.

Rev. P. J. Berg, Pastor of the Swedish M. E. church, Des Moines, Iowa, on March 4th, 1896, writes: "Last year I was troubled with a bad cough for about five months. I got medicine from my family physician and I tried other remedies without relief. When I first saw Dr. Kay's Lung Balm advertised I thought I would try it and I am glad I did. I bought a box and took a tablet now and then without any regularity and after a few days, to my great surprise, the cough was gone. Ten days ago I had sore throat; I was out of tablets and could not get them in Des Moines, and I sent to the Western office of Dr. B. J. Kay Medical Co., Omaha, Neb., for six boxes and as soon as I took it a few times that soreness and hoarseness all passed away in one night. I believe it is also good for sore throat." Dr. Kay's Lung Balm does not cause sickness at the stomach like many remedies and is more effectual than any other we know of. Sold by druggists at 25cts or sent by mail, five for $1.00. Why not send your orders at once and have this valuable medicine on hand? It may save your life, you certainly will need it before spring. A dose in time will save nine, and may save your life. Order now. Address Dr. B. J. Kay Medical Co., (Western office) Omaha, Neb. Send address for valuable receipt book.

The "boys" created considerable merriment last week by stuffing some clothes with hay and arranging a barber shop, with the barber sitting out side on a box. It was a very clever piece of work.

J. Frank Fouche gave a recital at the church Monday evening to a small audience. Mr. Fouche will probably advertise Klemme, as having very liberal class of people, very much interested in literary work.

A pleasant party was given by Fred Remer and A. C. Gauger to their many friends, Friday evening, at the German M. E. parsonage. They gave the party as a farewell, as they are going home to spend the balance of the winter. Oysters were served, and a general good time was enjoyed by all.

The firm of Kight & Austin, that bought the Bastian stock from Wesenburg Bros. sometime in September, packed their goods, chartered a car and shipped to west Bend, Wednesday morning where they will run a General Store. Bert Hess assisted in the packing and went with them, to help unpack. We are very sorry to loose this firm, not only in a business way, but socially as well; for during their stay among us they have made many lasting friends. west Bend is to be congratulated upon the acquisition of this firm to their town. We heartily recommend them to the people of west Bend.

THE KLEMME TIMES.

KLEMME, - - - IOWA

Hunting for trouble is more indicative of a weak brain than a stout heart.

We are all too apt to judge a performance by our opinion of the performer.

While marriage may not be a failure, it comes near being a faith cure in most cases.

It is said that next year the management of the New York horse show may introduce some horses.

It's a feeble creature that wants to shine merely in the character of being a friend of somebody who is something.

While those who amuse are always handy, those who can instruct are generally difficult to reach, and are only looked to when we must have them.

A Colorado Springs alderman has been expelled from church for "neglecting the means of grace and violating the discipline." He likely would not have been dismissed for that, however, had it not also been shown that he stood in pretty well with certain druggists who had been selling drinks on the sly. Of course that's different.

Experiments with balloons and airships multiply, but the various trips and flights have not yet brought the knowledge that will make travel in the air practicable except within circumscribed limits. The problem is an old one. Horace Walpole wrote from Strawberry Hill, in 1784: "We do hear even here of air-balloons—nay, by chance I saw a Lilliputian one over Richmond Hill. * * * I shall be gone before aerial navigation is perfected." After more than a century most people will be inclined to join in Walpole's remark, and lose hope of the accomplishment of air navigation in their day.

To do to the Indian as we would have him do to us were he in authority, is the only solution of the Indian problem. This was the ground taken by General Sherman, himself one of the hardest of Indian fighters. After the great battle under Kit Carson, the Navajo Indians were sent to an unwholesome reservation where they died by hundreds. One of the chiefs laid the situation before General Sherman, pleading that they might be sent away. "Where do you want to go?" asked the great-hearted soldier, laying a map before him; "for there you shall go." "My people are ill; they cannot walk," urged the chief. "I will send them in wagons," was the reply. "I called you my friend," sobbed the stoic, throwing his arms about Sherman's neck. "You are God!"

At present, according to Chief Constructor Hichborn's annual report, there are one hundred and ten vessels in the navy, of which thirty are armored, including eight battle ships, two cruisers, one ram, six double-turreted monitors, all of which are in active service, prepared for offensive or defensive operations, and thirteen single-turret monitors, which might be utilized in the harbors in which they now lie. Three other armored battle ships are now under construction. There are twenty-five new steel cruisers also in commission, in addition to the three special class vessels of the new navy—the Bancroft, Dolphin and Vesuvius. These are unarmored, as are the sixteen iron and wooden cruisers and six wooden sailing vessels still carried on the lists. Three torpedo boats are in use and fifteen under contract. The other vessels building are six gunboats, one submarine boat and fifteen torpedo boats.

From Dr. Watt's review of the mineral production of India for the past year it appears that the production of coal, though increasing rapidly, is not keeping pace with the consumption. Last year the production was 4,370,000 tons, or just 55 per cent more than the previous year (ten years ago the production was just 1,250,000 tons), but the import of coal was 800,000 tons, the largest on record except one year. Dr. Watt reminds us that coal is not used for domestic purposes, and this growing production and importation show growing industry. The iron industry, on the other hand, progresses very slowly, the product last year being only 46,000 tons. The furnaces are almost wholly confined to Bengal and to those places where coal is abundant in the immediate neighborhood of the ore, and where smelting can be carried on by European methods. In the central provinces ore exists in abundance, but the smelting is primitive and there are no authentic statistics. In Madras there is abundance of ore, but no fuel, while in Bombay there are both ore and fuel, but enterprise has not yet been systematically directed to smelting. The production of petroleum is almost entirely confined to Assam and Burma.

ALL OVER THE WORLD

IS IT A FAKE?

Spanish Authorities Announce That the Cuban Leader is Dead.

HAVANA, Dec. 9.—It is stated in most positive terms by the Spanish authorities that Antonio Maceo, the great insurgent leader and the heart and soul of the Cuban cause, has been killed in Havana province, after having effected the passage of the western trocha, near Mariel, at its northern extremity. With the Cuban leader died the youth, Francisco Gomez, son of Maximo Gomez, who accompanied the mulatto general on his passage of the trocha, which occurred on the 4th. The Spanish authorities now admit that the engagement with Maceo, in which he crossed the trocha, "was a fearful combat." Later, after Maceo's forces had passed into Havana province, the forces of both sides were concentrated and another fearful battle took place. After the battle, which was won by the Spanish troops, two bodies were found which the authorities claim are those of Maceo and Francisco Gomez, a son of Gen. Gomez.

It is reported that General Weyler was wounded in the engagement with Maceo at the trocha.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—The World's Key West special says: Private Havana advices flatly deny the Spanish report that Maceo has been killed. The story was concocted at the palace to counteract the bad effect of Maceo's success in crossing the trocha between two Spanish forts near Canas without losing a man. The "news" as to Maceo given the local press by Major Cirujeda himself and to the foreign correspondents by the press censor contains no proof of authenticity, was not authorized by the general staff, and did not beat the customary heading, "official." Various residents of Punta Brava scout Cirujeda's reports. They say the Spanish troops under Cirujeda were subjected to a humiliating defeat and lost one-third of his force. The rebels pursued him to the outskirts of the town.

HAVANA, Dec. 11.—Dr. Maxim Zertuch, personal physician to Antonio Maceo, has surrendered to the Spanish commander at San Felipe. The doctor confirms the announcement that Maceo was killed December 7, near Punta Brava, in an engagement between the insurgents and the Spanish column, commanded by Major Cirujeda. He says Maceo was shot in the chin, the bullet breaking his jaw and passing out near the neck and shoulder. Another bullet wounded him in the abdomen.

TURKEY WANTS TO FIGHT.

The Sultan Demands Explanations from Cleveland for His Message.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—A Washington special to the World says: President Cleveland has been called to account by the sultan of Turkey. An emphatic protest has been made by the Turkish government against the language used in the president's message to congress respecting the massacre of Armenians and the general conduct of the government towards the Christians in the empire. The situation is said to threaten the rupture of the diplomatic relations between the United States and Turkey. Mustapha Bey, the Turkish minister, it is rumored at the state department, has intimated that if some amend is not made by the president, he will be obliged to ask for his papers and will return to Constantinople. The deep displeasure of the sultan was made known to Secretary Olney by Mustapha Bey, in accordance with a cablegram received by him from his home government. The interview between the minister and the secretary of state is described as intensely interesting and somewhat exciting.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Emphatic denial is made at the state department of a published report that the Turkish minister, by direction of the sultan, has protested against the language of the president's message to congress in its treatment of the Turkish question.

CHAPTER I.

COME quickly, Lady Felicie, and I will show to you the apparition. You shall see for yourself if old Jeannot has invented a foolish tale to scare the silly peasant people. And my old eyes have not cheated me nor been bewitched by an evil spell—the figure passed not ten minutes ago. It always returns this way—so you can see it for yourself.

So said the worthy servitor of the Languedoc family, Jeannot Lazin, in a solemn and suppressed voice, as he motioned for his young mistress to follow him into the low shrubbery which skirted the meadow, ere the dense woods took possession of the ground.

The youthful Lady Felicie, with a smile of arch merriment on her bright young face, followed him fearlessly—pausing a moment, however, to cast an admiring glance at the scene she was leaving behind her.

Well worthy, indeed, this parting attention, was the charming bit of landscape, just now coqueting with the purple mistiness of approaching evening.

A prolonged, undulating slope of smoothly turfed terraces edged with straight lines of poplars, like deep green fringes, and crowned at the summit with the cluster of turreted roofs forming Languedoc chateau, whose tall, quaintly shaped chimneys rose far up against the gold flushed blue of the clouds, seeming to reach the slender thread of light which the young new moon hung out, as sign of her advent.

At the right was the thickly woven, undulating canopy of grand old trees, forming the Little Forest of which the Languedocs were so proud and chary—and far on to the left you caught the glitter of waves, where the Mediterranean reveled in the last golden beams of sunshine, and the bright reflection showed the spires and roofs of Frejus like some cloud city, ready to vanish at a moment's warning.

Lady Felicie gave a glance—smiled in joyous, triumphant consciousness that the beautiful spot was her own proud heritage, and then stepped lightly and daintily along over the rough pathway by which Jeannot led her.

The old man looked profoundly solemn—very much awed, and a little frightened, as he plunged into the deepening shade, every now and then pausing to allow the fairy footsteps of his companion to recover the advantage gained by his huge strides.

He found a dry, mossy spot, half covered with drooping vines, and motioned for Lady Felicie to occupy it.

"It is here I have always stood, Lady Felicie; you see that it commands a view of the opening path; he has always gone out past me," whispered Jeannot, with a stealthy glance at the designated pathway.

The smile faded off from the girl's face. Somehow the weird somberness of the wood, with old Jeannot's awe-struck face beside her—she could not retain her playfulness. She drew her mantle of violet silk closer over her head, and waited in silence.

"Hark!" whispered Jeannot, unconsciously grasping her arm.

A dull, heavy sound, of regular blows, whether from mortal ax, shovel or pick, could hardly be determined, broke the stillness reigning around.

The old man crossed himself reverently.

"I always hear it just so," whispered he, "and in a little while he is sure to appear."

"But ghosts don't work, Jeannot," said Lady Felicie. "Why don't you get some of the men with you, and follow up the sounds till you find what makes them?"

"Haven't I tried it alone? Holy Mary! I've searched and searched the woods over, and never a trace can I find of the ground broken, or of a tree disturbed. I had wild ideas at first—I thought somebody was burying some guilty secret—a murdered body, or a stolen treasure, and I meant old Jeannot shoud have the glory of finding it all out. I might as well have tried to raise a sunken ship from the sea. Oh, now, my lady, it's all beyond mortal finding out—that's my belief, and sure I won't be so bold as to bring upon myself the evil one's vengeance by prying into his doings. It was only because you reproved me, as an idle story teller, that I brought you here to see for yourself——"

He paused abruptly, shrank back under the bushes, and frantically seized her hand, while he pointed to the open pathway beyond them.

Lady Felicie bent forward, not without a violent beating heart, it must be admitted.

A tall, darkly draperied figure, with a shovel over his shoulder, was stalking slowly along before her eyes.

So much was undeniable. Moreover, although one hand held the shovel, and the other swung idly by his side, though no lantern or torch was anywhere visible, a little circle of bright light went wavering along with him, seeming to radiate from his very feet.

Jeannot was muttering prayers, with vehement eagerness.

Lady Felicie made a desperate exertion, seeing the old man's terror, and exclaimed resolutely:

"Nonsense! It was a man, who is prowling around here for some evil purpose. I acknowledge you have convinced me, Jeannot—my good, old Jeannot—that I was hasty in accusing you of trusting too much to your imagination. You have certainly seen the figure, but I opine it will prove to be decidedly more tangible and natural than a ghost. You must bring others with you and follow him——"

"Oh, my Lady Felicie, it is a ghost, or the evil one—don't talk so scoffingly. I am afraid an evil spell will fall upon you as a punishment. I was going to tell you how I did follow him, and how he turned upon me his blazing eye and threw up his hands, and little flames came dancing all around him, and he opened his mouth, and it thundered, and the very ground seemed to quake. Oh, I smelt the sulphur, and I saw the blue flames. Don't doubt it, Lady Felicie—I wouldn't come again for the king's scepter. I came now only to convince you. I am afraid some terrible thing is to happen to us, and that this is the sign. Holy Mary, have mercy! I will get the good priest to say prayers for us all. But come, we must return. My lady, the countess, will be angry with me for bringing you here, and Victoire will be tired of waiting where you stationed her."

Lady Felicie followed thoughtfully.

"It is very odd," murmured she; "when my father returns from Paris, it must be thoroughly investigated."

"Ah, yes; I shall be so glad when the count gets home. M. Pierre, the overseer, called me a foolish, old driveller, and bade me hold my tongue. The noble count might believe him, but you, Lady Felicie, can assure him that I do not lie. I'm sure that I do not want to frighten all the people, as M. Pierre says I do; but this is a dreadful thing to keep to myself."

"Don't talk now, Jeannot," said Lady Felicie impatiently. "How dark it has grown! I don't know what my mother would say, if she knew I came with you and without any other attendant. Pray, let us hurry."

The old servant quickened his pace at these words, and the lady kept step with him now.

She gave a great sigh of relief when they reached the open ground. The stars were out, and the pale silver crescent had brightened into gold. From the chateau flashed a ruddy gleam kindling from window to window.

A light figure came bounding down the hill.

"Oh, my Lady Felicie, have you come? Your mother has sent out twice for you. Have you seen it?"

"Hush, Victoire! keep discreet silence if you wish my favor, and don't tease me with questions. I will go to my mother now."

The pretty waiting maid dropped an humble courtesy, and followed demurely after her mistress, as the latter turned swiftly toward the chateau, but she was eagerly repeating to herself:

"Lady Felicie has seen the ghost, I am sure—or why does old Jeannot fling me such a triumphant glance! How brave these noble ladies can be! Nothing, I am sure, could have tempted me to go with Jeannot into the wood at this hour. She is so grave and still—it is certain that she has seen something."

The lady, however, did not gratify her curiosity. She passed hastily across the broad hall when she reached the chateau, and went directly to the boudoir of the countess.

She was a very fine looking woman, this Countess Languedoc—tall and stately, and dressed with suitable richness; but there was a sad expression in her soft, deep eyes, which betrayed that her noble estate had not brought with it unmixed happiness.

She rose from the velvet lounge as her daughter entered, and exclaimed, childishly:

"Felicie, Felicie, where have you been? This wild rambling will not answer. You know how deeply it would displease the count to know you were away from the chateau grounds, unattended. And I have sent twice for you, and no one knew where you were, not even Victoire. Your father—"

The sweet, red lips of Felicie checked further speech, as she flung her arms around the lady's neck, and kissing her repeatedly, answered gaily:

"Ah, yes, my father—I understand, my lady mother; but mon pere is away in Paris, and will never know, for I am sure you will not tell him. And it is so refreshing, so delightful to be free and wild just a little; I'm sure when I have half a dozen servants at my heels, as papa always sends me forth, all my pleasure is destroyed, and I have many a time envied one of our own peasant girls her unmolested freedom. Say, now, my darlingest of mammas, do you blame me, if I take advantage of my father's absence, and send the troublesome attendants to their proper places?"

The dancing, sparkling eyes peered roguishly into her face, and the countess smiled, even while she sighed.

"I suppose it is natural," said she yielding, while she stroked back the glossy waves of hair from the fair forehead.

"Of course it is," replied Felicie, gaily; "mon pere is so—so exceedingly particular, it is most tiresome. Where's the good of grandeur if it must torment you all the time? Now that he can't insist upon our going down to regular dinner in that huge dining hall, that looks ready to swallow two people like you and me, why not ring the bell and order a nice little repast for us here? It would be so cosy, so home like, so extremely delightful."

Felicie flew to reach it, and after the necessary orders had been given, she threw off her mantle, playfully seated the countess again in the easy chair, and drew a cushion of emerald velvet to her feet.

"Now, mamma, for one of our cosy talks—what shall it be about?"

"Your absence, tonight, ma chere. What detained you so long, my child?"

Felicie shrugged the white shoulders gleaming so prettily through the lace cape of her low bodice of violet silk.

"Ah, mamma, that will be too dismal a topic. Wait till they have brought more candles. Tell me something about your girlhood; what you thought, how you felt when you were no older than your giddy daughter."

She took up the fairy hands crossed over her knee and kissed them softly.

"I must say as you do, my love, it is too dismal for that, while the room is so dimly lighted. I have received a letter from your father during your absence. He is to leave Paris in another week, and he thinks the young Marquis de Berri will accompany him on his return hither, and bids me prepare you for it."

"Oh, mamma," exclaimed she, and then covering her face with her hands she burst into tears and sobbed vehemently.

CHAPTER II.

THE countess made no effort to check her, only now and then bent down and kissed the flushed forehead and wet cheek.

Felicie started to her feet and began pacing to and fro.

"It is so humiliating!" exclaimed she, passionately; "to be bartered and sold like a dumb animal, because rank and estates are matched; to have no question asked concerning character and hearts. Oh, it is barbarous!"

The countess watched her with a perturbed and deeply sympathizing face.

"Does my father think I am a stone, or a butterfly—that I have no feeling, no taste, no deep soul requirements? Oh, I have envied the peasants before, but never so much as now. I could wish I had never been born!" went on Felicie, more and more bitterly, while the excitement grew upon her, her soft, dark eyes glittered fiercely, and two burning crimson spots gathered upon her cheeks.

Her mother sighed deeply.

The girl heard it and turned impetuously.

"Oh, mamma, mamma! my good, true, tender mother—surely you will not be harsh with me, you will pity me! Oh, implore my father to forego this hated marriage. I know nothing of the marquis, I do not wish to know him. I abhor his very name. Say that I need not see him."

"I fear that I cannot promise you any help," answered the countess, sadly.

Felicie turned away with girlish petulance.

"No one cares for my true happiness, no one knows how to pity me."

"Felicie!" said the countess, in a tone of deep reproach and unutterable sadness.

VICTIM OF A TRAITOR.

Maceo Led Into Ambush and Foully Murdered by the Spaniards.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The Cuban junta have received by way of Jacksonville, Fla., from their agents sent to investigate the facts regarding Maceo's reported death, definite information. The dispatch to the junta says that Maceo was assassinated through the instrumentality of Dr. Zertucha, who led Maceo and his staff across the trocha, where they were met by Ahumeda, and Maceo and his entire staff were assassinated with matchets.

HAVANA, Dec. 14.—The steamships San Francisco, Monserrat, Buenos Ayres and Sartrustegui have arrived here with reinforcements of 6,000 troops.

ZULUS BREAK OUT.

They Burn a British Mission in Central Africa.

CAPETOWN, Dec. 13.—Advices from Blantyre, the chief town of British Central Africa, dated October 25, announce the dispatch of two British columns against the Angoni Zulus under Chief Chikuski, who had invaded South Nyassalund and burned a British missionary station, besides massacreing the inhabitants of a number of villages. The Portuguese at Tete have invited the co-operation of the British. Chikuski commands 30,000 warriors, and the British troops only number about 500. Great anxiety was felt at Blantyre when these advices left that town and an attack upon it was feared.

WEYLER RETURNS TO HAVANA.

The Captain General Received With Enthusiasm.

HAVANA, Dec, 13.—General Weyler has returned to Havana. He rode into the city on horseback, accompanied by two squadrons of cavalry. His coming had been made known to the public and large crowds gathered to welcome him. He was given a popular ovation from the time he reached the city limits until he reached the palace. At some places along the route girls strewed flowers in his pathway and he was in other ways treated as a popular hero. He claims the rebellion has been suppressed.

HORROR AT XERES.

Building Collapses and Many Are Killed.

CADIZ, Dec. 12.—A terrible disaster occurred at Xeres, in the province of Andalusia and sixteen miles from this city, through the collapse of a building. A house containing twenty-five persons collapsed without warning, burying all of its inmates in the debris. The house fell upon an adjoining tenement building, which also gave way. The tenement house was inhabited by eighty-five persons, all of whom were buried by the wreckage. Many dead bodies have been removed and the loss of life will be appalling.

MURDERED HIS DAUGHTER.

Atrocious Crime Laid at the Door of a Wealthy Kansas Farmer.

OSAGE, Kan., Dec. 11.—Rudolph Brockton, the wealthy farmer of Osage township, who beat and shockingly abused his 17-year-old daughter because she did not work to suit him in the field, must answer to the charge of murder, having been held for trial in $10,000 bonds. After terribly beating the girl four weeks ago, Brockman dragged her a quarter of a mile to his barn and tied her to the axle of a wagon. She died from her injuries.

BREVITIES.

It turns out that the outlaw killed near Guthrie, Okla., a few days ago, was not "Dynamite Dick," but "Black Graig," one of the most notorious highwaymen of the west, who operated for years in Indian Territory, Arkansas, New Mexico and Colorado, having robbed hundreds of travelers, held up a dozen trains and killed as many men.

A cable from London says that Russia, France and Great Britain have agreed on a plan of action which will insure reforms in Turkey. Abdul Hamid II is to be shorn of his power and reduced practically to a vassalage. Italy, Germany and Austria, have assented that the Russian, French and British ships of war shall force the Dardenelles, if necessary in the execution of the new policy.

George Allen, one of the men who trained Sharkey for the fight with Fitzsimmons, has made a confession in which he says Wyatt Earp, referee of the fight; Dan Lynch, Sharkey's manager, and Sharkey and Danny Needham are concerned in a plot to deprive Fitzsimmons of the fruits of his victory. It was arranged that Sharkey was to make it appear that he had been fouled at a point in the contest when he was in danger of being knocked out, and he was to give the signal by placing his hand on the groin. Then Needham was to jump in and claim a foul and Earp was to give the decision in favor of Sharkey. In court later Trainers Allen and Smith gave evidence in corroboration of this story.

W. E. Bullard, who last winter filled the responsible position of secretary of the Iowa senate was Dec. 11th. convicted of fogery, the jury being out two hours. The case of state against him was that in Dec., 1894, the defendant forged a note for $600, signed by Ed and Mary Bullard, mother of the defendant. A mortgage was made at the same time, covering property of these parties and pretending to be security for this note. There was also an abstract with the papers and insurance policy. In April, 1896, Mrs. R. E. Bullard took the note against the Keplinger's, mortgage and abstract to the Iowa Valley bank and deposited them for interest collection. They notified Keplinger, and he came and denied the signature. The bank officers notified Mrs. Bullard, and she secured the papers, as she admits and burned them in a coal hod.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS.

DEALS WITH EVERY SUBJECT OF NATIONAL IMPORT.

The Cause of the Cuban Insurgents Treated at Some Length—Negotiations with Spain for Autonomy—Failure on the Part of Spain Might Invite Our Interference—Tariff and Finance—A Roast for the Trusts.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 7.—President Cleveland to-day transmitted his annual message to congress. Condensed, it is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:—As representatives of the people in the legislative branch of their government, you have assembled at a time when the strength and excellence of our free institutions and the fitness of our citizens to enjoy popular rule have been again made manifest. A political contest involving momentous consequences, fraught with feverish apprehension, and creating aggressiveness so intense as to approach bitterness and passion, has been waged throughout our land, and determined by the decree of free and independent suffrage, without disturbance of our tranquility or the least sign of weakness in our national structure. When we consider these incidents and contemplate the peaceful obedience and manly submission which have succeeded a heated clash of political opinions, we discover abundant evidence of a determination on the part of our countrymen to abide by every verdict of the popular will, and to be controlled at all times by an abiding faith in the agencies established for the direction of the affairs of their government. Thus our people exhibit a patriotic disposition, which entitles them to demand of those who undertake to make and execute their laws such faithful and unselfish service in their behalf as can only be prompted by a serious appreciation of the trust and confidence which the acceptance of public duty invites.

In obedience to a constitutional requirement I herein submit to the congress certain information concerning national affairs with the suggestion of such legislation as in my judgment is necessary and expedient. To secure brevity and avoid tiresome narration, I shall omit many details concerning matters within federal control which, though by no means unimportant, are more profitably discussed in departmental reports. I shall also further curtail this communication by omitting a minute recital of many minor incidents connected with our foreign relations which have heretofore found a place in executive messages but are now contained in a report of the Treasury of State.

SPAIN AND CUBA.

A Difficult Problem.

The insurrection in Cuba still continues with all its perplexities. It is difficult to perceive that any progress has thus far been made toward the pacification of the island or that the situation of affairs as depicted in my last annual message has in the least improved. If Spain still holds Havana and the seaports and all the considerable towns, the insurgents still roam at will over at least two thirds of the inland country. If the determination of Spain to put down the insurrection seems but to strengthen with the lapse of time, and is evinced by her unhesitating devotion of largely increased military and naval forces to the task, there is much reason to believe that the insurgents have gained in point of numbers, and character, and resources, and are none the less inflexible in their resolve not to succumb, without practically securing the great objects for which they took up arms. If Spain has not yet re-established her authority, neither have the insurgents yet made good their title to be regarded as an independent state. Indeed, as the contest has gone on, the pretense that civil government exists on the island, except so far as Spain is able to maintain it, has been practically abandoned. Spain does keep on foot such a government, more or less imperfectly, in the large towns and their immediate suburbs. But, that exception being made, the entire country is either given over to anarchy or is subject to the military occupation of one or the other party.

Calls It a "Government on Paper."

It is reported, indeed, on reliable authority, that, at the demand of the commander-in-chief of the insurgent army, the putative Cuban government has now given up all attempt to exercise its functions, leaving that government confessedly (what there is the best reason for supposing it always to have been in fact) a government merely on paper. Were the Spanish armies able to meet their antagonists in the open or in pitched battle, prompt and decisive results might be looked for, and the immense superiority of the Spanish forces in numbers, discipline, and equipment, could hardly fail to tell greatly to their advantage. But they are called upon to face a foe that shuns general engagements, that can choose and does choose its own ground, that from the nature of the country is visible or invisible at pleasure, and that fights only from ambuscade and when all the advantages of position and numbers are on its side. In a country where all that is indispensable to life in the way of food, clothing and shelter is so easily obtainable, especially by those born and bred on the soil, it is obvious that there is hardly a limit to the time during which hostilities of this sort may be prolonged. Meanwhile, as in all cases of protracted civil strife, the passions of the combatants grow more and more inflamed and excesses on both sides become more frequent and more deplorable. They are also participated in by bands of marauders who now in the name of one party and now in the name of the other as may best suit the occasion, harry the country at will and plunder its wretched inhabitants for their own advantage. Such a condition of things would inevitably entail immense destruction of property even if it were the policy of both parties to prevent it as far as practicable. But while such seemed to be the original policy of the Spanish government, it has now apparently abandoned it and is acting upon the same theory as the insurgents, namely: that the exigencies of the contest require the wholesale annihilation of property that it may not prove of use and advantage to the enemy.

Decay of Cuban Industry.

It is to the same end that in pursuance of general orders Spanish garrisons are now being withdrawn from plantations and the rural population required to concentrate itself in the towns. The sure result would seem to be that the industrial value of the island is fast diminishing, and that unless there is a speedy and radical change in existing conditions it will soon disappear altogether. That value consists very largely, of course, in its capacity to produce sugar—a capacity already much reduced by the interruptions to tillage which have taken place during the last two years. It is reliably asserted that should these interruptions continue during the current year and practically extend, as is now threatened, to the entire sugar producing territory of the island so much time and so much money will be required to restore the land to its normal productiveness that it is extremely doubtful if capital can be induced to even make the attempt. The spectacle of the utter ruin of an adjoining country, by nature one of the most fertile and charming on the globe, would engage the serious attention of the government and the people of the United States in any circumstances. In point of fact, they have a concern with it which is by no means of a wholly sentimental or philanthropic character. It lies so near to us as to be hardly separated from our territory. Our actual pecuniary interest in it is second only to that of the people and government of Spain. It is reasonably estimated that at least from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 of American capital are invested in plantations and in railroad, mining and other business enterprises on the island. The volume of trade between the United States and Cuba, which in 1889 amounted to about $64,000,000, rose in 1893 to about $103,000,000, and in 1894, the year before the present insurrection broke out, amounted to nearly $96,000,000. Besides this large pecuniary stake in the fortunes of Cuba, the United States finds itself inextricably involved in the present contest in other ways both vexatious and costly.

Recognition Not Now Possible.

It was at first proposed that belligerent rights should be accorded to the insurgents—a proposition no longer urged because untimely and in practical operation clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests. It has since been and is now sometimes contended that the independence of the insurgents should be recognized. But imperfect and restricted as the Spanish government of the island may be, no other exists there—unless the will of the military officer in temporary command of a particular district can be dignified as a species of government. It is now also suggested that the United States should buy the island—a suggestion possibly worthy of consideration if there were any evidence of a desire or willingness on the part of Spain to entertain such a proposal. It is urged, finally, that, all other methods failing, the existing internecine strife in Cuba should be terminated by our intervention, even at the cost of a war between the United States and Spain—a war which its advocates confidently prophesy could be neither large in its proportions nor doubtful in its issue. The correctness of this forecast need be neither affirmed nor denied. The United States has nevertheless a character to maintain as a nation, which plainly dictates that right and not might should be the rule of its conduct.

Says That We Should Respect Spain.

Further, though the United States is not a nation to which peace is a necessity, it is in truth the most pacific of powers, and desires nothing so much as to live in amity with all the world. Its own ample and diversified domains satisfy all possible longings for territory, preclude all dreams of conquest, and prevent any casting of covetous eyes upon neighboring regions, however attractive. That our conduct toward Spain and her dominions has constituted no exception to this national disposition, is made manifest by the course of our government, not only thus far during the present insurrection, but during the ten years that followed the rising at Yara in 1868. No other great power, it may safely be said, under circumstances of similar perplexity, would have manifested the same restraint and the same patient endurance.

It may also be said that this persistent attitude of the United States toward Spain in connection with Cuba, unquestionably evinces no slight respect and regard for Spain on the part of the American people. They in truth do not forget her connection with the discovery of the western hemisphere, nor do they underestimate the great qualities of the Spanish people, nor fail to fully recognize their splendid patriotism and their chivalrous devotion to the national honor. They view with wonder and admiration the cheerful resolution with which vast bodies of men are sent across thousands of miles of ocean and an enormous debt accumulated that the costly possession of the gem of the Antilles may still hold its place in the Spanish crown. And if neither the government nor the people of the United States have shut their eyes to the course of events in Cuba or have failed to realize the existence of conceded grievances which have led to the present revolt from the authority of Spain—grievances recognized by the queen regent and by the cortes, voiced by the most patriotic and enlightened of Spanish statesmen without regard to party, and demonstrated by reforms proposed by the executive and approved by the legislative branch of the Spanish government. It is in the assumed temper and disposition of the Spanish government to remedy these grievances, fortified by indications of influential public opinion in Spain, that this government has hoped to discover the most promising and effective means of composing the present strife, with honor and advantage to Spain and with the achievement of all the reasonable objects of the insurrection.

Our Offer to Spain.

Nevertheless, realizing that suspicions and precautions on the part of the weaker of two combatants are always natural and not always unjustifiable—being sincerely desirous, in the interest of both as well as on its own account, that the Cuban problem should be solved with the least possible delay—it was intimated by this government to the government of Spain some months ago that, if a satisfactory measure of home rule were tendered the Cuban insurgents, and would be accepted by them upon a guaranty of its execution, the United States would endeavor to find a way not objectionable to Spain of furnishing such guaranty. While no definite response to this intimation has yet been received from the Spanish government, it is believed to be not altogether unwelcome, while, as already suggested, no reason is perceived why it should not be approved by the insurgents. Neither party can fail to see the importance of early action, and both must realize that to prolong the present state of things for even a short period will add enormously to the time and labor and expenditure necessary to bring about the industrial recuperation of the island. It is, therefore, fervently hoped on all grounds that earnest efforts for healing the breech between Spain and the insurgent Cubans upon the lines above indicated may be at once inaugurated and pushed to an immediate and successful issue. The friendly offices of the United States, either in the manner above outlined or in any other way consistent with our constitution and laws, will always be at the disposal of either party. Whatever circumstances may arise, our policy and our interests would constrain us to object to the acquisition of the island or an interference with its control by any other power.

If Spain Fails.

It should be added that it cannot be reasonably assumed that the hitherto expectant attitude of the United States will be indefinitely maintained. While we are anxious to accord all due respect to the sovereignty of Spain, we cannot view the pending conflict in all its features, and properly apprehend our inevitably close relations to it, and its possible results, without considering that by the course of events we may be drawn into such an unusual and unprecedented condition, as will fix a limit to our patient waiting for Spain to end the contest, either alone and in her own way, or with our friendly co-operation. When the inability of Spain to deal successfully with the insurrection has become manifest, and it is demonstrated that her sovereignty is extinct in Cuba for all purposes of its rightful existence, and when a hopeless struggle for its re-establishment has degenerated into a strife which means nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject-matter of the conflict, a situation will be presented in which our obligations to the sovereignty of Spain will be superseded by higher obligations, which we can hardly hesitate to recognize and discharge.

Deferring the choice of ways and methods until the time for action arrives, we should make them depend upon the precise conditions than existing; and they should not be determined upon without giving careful heed to every consideration involving our honor and interest, or the international duty we owe to Spain. Until we face the contingencies suggested, or the situation is by other incidents imperatively changed, we should continue in the line of conduct heretofore pursued, thus in all circumstances exhibiting our obedience to the requirements of public law and our regard for the duty enjoined upon us by the position we occupy in the family of nations. A contemplation of emergencies that may arise should plainly lead us to avoid their creation either through a careless disregard of present duty or even an undue stimulation and ill-timed expression of feeling. But I have deemed it not amiss to remind the congress that a time may arise when a correct policy and care for our interests as well as a regard for the interests of other nations and their citizens joined by considerations of humanity and a desire to see a rich and fertile country, intimately related to us saved from complete devastation will constrain our government to such action as will subserve the interests thus involved and at the same time promise to Cuba and its inhabitants an opportunity to enjoy the blessings of peace.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Treasury Receipts, Etc.

The secretary of the treasury reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, the receipts of the government, from all sources, amounted to $409,475,408.78. During the same period its expenditures were $434,678,654.48, the excess of expenditures over receipts thus amounting to $25,203,245.70. The ordinary expenditures during the year were $4,015,852.21 less than during the preceding fiscal year. Of the receipts mentioned there was derived from customs the sum of $180,021,751.67, and from internal revenue $146,830,615.66. The receipts from customs show an increase of $7,863,134.22 over those from the same source for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and the receipts from internal revenue an increase of $8,584,587.91.

The value of our imported dutiable merchandise during the last fiscal year was $369,757,470, and the value of free goods imported $409,967,470, being an increase of $6,523,675 in the value of dutiable goods and $41,231,034 in the value of free goods over the preceding year. Our exports of merchandise, foreign and domestic, amounted in value to $882,606,938, being an increase over the preceding year of $75,068,773. The average ad valorem duty paid on dutiable goods imported during the year was 39.94 per cent, and on free and dutiable goods taken together 20.55 per cent.

The cost of collecting our internal revenue was 2.78 per cent, as against 2.81 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895. The total production of distilled spirits, exclusive of fruit brandies, was 86,588,703 taxable gallons, being an increase of 6,639,108 gallons over the preceding year. There was also an increase of 1,443,676 gallons of spirits, produced from fruit, as compared with the preceding year. The number of barrels of beer produced was 35,859,250, as against 33,589,784 produced in the preceding fiscal year, being an increase of 2,269,466 barrels.

The Precious Metals.

The total amount of gold exported during the last fiscal year was $112,409,947, and of silver $60,541,670, being an increase of $45,941,466 of gold and $13,246,384 of silver over the exportations of the preceding fiscal year. The imports of gold were $33,525,065 and of silver $28,777,186, being $2,859,695 less of gold and $8,566,007 more of silver than during the preceding year. The total stock of metallic money in the United States at the close on the last fiscal year, ended on the 30th day of June, 1896, was $1,228,326,035, of which $599,597,964 was in gold and $628,728,071 in silver. On the first day of November, 1896, the total stock of money of all kinds in the country was $2,285,410,590, and the amount in circulation, not including that in the treasury holdings, was $1,627,055,641, being $22.63 per capita upon an estimated population of 71,902,000. The production of the precious metals in the United States during the calendar year 1895 is estimated to have been 2,254,760 fine ounces of gold of the value of $46,610,000, and 55,727,000 fine ounces of silver of the commercial value of $36,445,000, and the coinage value of $72,051,000. The estimated production of these metals throughout the world during the same period was 9,688,821 fine ounces of gold, amounting to $200,285,700 in value, and 169,189,249 fine ounces of silver, of the commercial value of $110,654,000, and of the coinage value of $218,738,100 according to our ratio.

The coinage of these metals in the various countries of the world during the same calendar year amounted to $232,701,438 in gold and $121,996,219 in silver. The total coinage at the mints of the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, amounted to $71,188,468.52, of which $58,878,490 was in gold coins and $12,309,978.52 in standard silver dollars, subsidiary coins, and minor coins.

The number of national banks organized from the time the law authorizing their creation was passed, up to October 31, 1896, was 5,051, and of this number 3,379 were at the date last mentioned in active operation, having authorized capital stock of $650,014,895, held by 288,902 shareholders, and circulating notes amounting to $211,412,620.

THE NAVY.

Construction of Warships.

The work of the navy department and its present condition are fully exhibited in the report of the secretary. The construction of vessels for our new navy has been energetically prosecuted by the present administration upon the general lines previously adopted, the department having seen no necessity for radical changes in prior methods under which the work was found to be progressing in a manner highly satisfactory. It has been decided, however, to provide in every ship-building contract that the builder should pay all trial expenses, and it has also been determined to pay no speed premiums in future contracts. The premiums recently earned and some yet to be decided are features of the contracts made before this conclusion was reached.

On March 4, 1893, there were in commission but two armored vessels, the double-terreted Monitors, Miantonomoh and Monterey. Since that date of vessels theretofore authorized there have been placed in their first commission three first-class and two second-class battleships, two armored cruisers, one harbor-defense ram and five double turreted Monitors, including the Maine and the Puritan, just completed. Eight new unarmored cruisers and two new gun-boats have also been commissioned. The Iowa, another battleship, will be completed about March 1, and at least four more gunboats will be ready for sea in the early spring.

It is gratifying to state that our ships and their outfits are believed to be equal to the best that can be manufactured elsewhere, and that such notable reductions have been made in their cost as to justify the statement that quite a number of vessels are now being constructed at rates as low as those that prevail in European shipyards.

TARIFF AND FINANCES.

I desire to recur to the statements elsewhere made concerning the government's receipts and expenditures for the purpose of venturing upon some suggestions touching our present tariff law and its operation.

This statute took effect on the 28th day of August, 1894. Whatever may be its shortcomings as a complete measure of tariff reform, it must be conceded that it has opened the way to a freer and greater exchange of commodities between us and other countries, and thus furnished a wider markets for products and manufacturing.

The only entire fiscal year during which this law has been in force ended on the 30th day of June, 1896. In that year our imports increased over those of the previous year more than $6,500,000, while the value of the domestic products we exported, and which found markets abroad, was nearly $70,000,000 more than during the preceding year.

Those who insist that the cost to our people of articles coming to them from abroad for their needful use should only be increased through tariff charges to an extent necessary to meet the expenses of the government, as well as those who claim that tariff charges may be laid upon such articles beyond the necessities of government revenue, and with the additional purpose of so increasing their price in our markets as to give American manufacturers and producers better and more profitable opportunities, must agree that our tariff laws are only primarily justified as sources of revenue to enable the government to meet the necessary expenses of its maintenance. Considered as to its efficiency in this aspect, the present law can by no means fall under just condemnation. During the only complete fiscal year of its operation it has yielded nearly $8,000,000 more revenue than was received from tariff duties in the preceding year. There was, nevertheless, a deficit between our receipts and expenditures of a little more than $25,000,000. This, however, was not unexpected.

Question of Revenue.

The government thus applying a surplus fortunately in its treasury to the payment of expenses not met by its current revenues, is not at all to be likened to a man living beyond his income and thus incurring debt or encroaching on his principal.

It is not one of the functions of our government to accumulate and make additions to a fund not needed for immediate expenditure. With individuals it is the chief object of struggle and effort. The application of an accumulated fund by the government to the payment of its running expenses is a duty.

Financial Legislation Recommended.

This reference to the condition and prospects of our revenues naturally suggests an allusion to the weakness and vices of our financial methods. They have been frequently pressed upon the attention of congress in previous executive communications and the inevitable danger of their continued toleration pointed out. Without now repeating these details, I cannot refrain from again earnestly presenting the necessity of the prompt reform of a system opposed to every rule of sound finance and shown by experience to be fraught with the gravest peril and perplexity. The terrible civil war which shook the foundations of our government more than thirty years ago brought in its train the destruction of property, the wasting of our country's substance, and the estrangement of brethren. These are now past and forgotten. Even the distressing loss of life the conflict entailed is but a sacred memory, which fosters patriotic sentiment and keeps alive a tender regard for those who nobly died. And yet there remains with us to-day in full strength and activity as an incident of that tremendous struggle, a feature of its financial necessities, not only unsuited to our present circumstances, but manifestly a disturbing menace to business security and an ever-present agent of monetary distress.

Because we may be enjoying a temporary relief from its depressing influence, this should not lull us into a false security nor lead us to forget the suddenness of past visitations.

I am more convinced than ever that we can have no assured financial peace and safety until the government currency obligations upon which gold may be demanded from the treasury are withdrawn from circulation and cancelled. This might be done, as has been heretofore recommended by their exchange for long term bonds bearing a low rate of interest or by their redemption with the proceeds of such bonds.

Even if only United States notes known as greenbacks were thus retired it is probable that the treasury notes issued in payment of silver purchases under the act of July 14, 1890, now paid in gold when demanded would not create much disturbance as they might from time to time when received in the treasury by redemption in gold or otherwise be gradually and prudently replaced by silver coin. This plan of issuing bonds for the purpose of redemption certainly appears to be the most effective and direct path to the needed reform.

In default of this, however, it would be a step in the right direction if currency obligations redeemable in gold, whenever so redeemed, should be cancelled instead of being reissued. This operation would be a slow remedy, but it would improve present condition.

National banks should redeem their own notes. They should be allowed to issue circulation to the par value of bonds deposited as security for its retirement of United States notes and demption, and the tax on their circutreasury notes issued under the law lation should be reduced to one-fourth of one per cent.

In considering projects for the retirement of United States notes and treasury notes issued under the law of 1890, I am of the opinion that we have placed too much stress upon the danger of contracting the currency and have calculated too little upon the gold that would be added to our circulation if invited to us by letter and safer financial methods. It is not so much a contraction of our currency that should be avoided as its unequal distribution.

This might be obviated and any fear of harmful contraction at the same time removed, by allowing the organization of smaller banks and in less populous communities than are now permitted, and also authorizing existing banks to establish branches in small communities under proper restrictions.

Another topic in which our people rightfully take a deep interest may here be briefly considered. I refer to the existence of trusts and other huge aggregations of capital, the object of which is to secure the monopoly of some particular branch of trade, industry or commerce, and so stifle wholesome competition. When these are defended it is usually on the ground that though they increase profits they also reduce prices, and thus may benefit the public. It must be remembered, however, that a reduction of prices to the people is not one of the real objects of these organizations, nor is their tendency necessarily in that direction. If it occurs in a particular case it is only because it accords with the purpose or interest of those managing the scheme.

Trusts Get a Roast.

Such occasional results fall far short of compensating the palpable evils charged to the account of trusts and monopolies. Their tendency is to crush out individual independence and to hinder or preventt he free use of human faculties and the full development of human character. Through them the farmer, the artisan and the smalls trader is in danger of dislodgment from the proud position of being his own master, watchful of all that touches his country's prosperity, in which he has an individual lot and interested in all that affects the advantages of business of which he is a factor, to be relegated to the level of a mere appurtenance to a great machine, with little free will, with no duty but of passive obedience, and with little hope of opportunity of rising in the scale of responsible and helpful citizenship.

To the instinctive belief that such is the inevitable trend of trusts and monopolies is due the widespread and deep-seated popular aversion in which they are held and the not unreasonable insistence, that whatever may be their incidental economic advantages, their general effect upon personal character, prospects and usefulness can not be otherwise than injurious.

Though congress has attempted to deal with this matter by legislation the laws passed for that purpose thus far have proved ineffective, not because of any lack of disposition or attempt to enforce them, but simply because the laws themselves as interpreted by the courts do not reach the difficulty. If the insufficiencies of existing laws can be remedied by further legislation it should be done. The fact must be recognized, however, that all federal legislation on this subject may fall short of its purpose because of inherent obstacles and also because of the complex character of our governmental system.

It does not follow, however, that this is the limit of the remedy that may be applied. Even though it may be found that federal authority is not broad enough to fully reach the case, there can be no doubt of the power of the several states to act effectively in the premises, and there should be no reason to doubt their willingness to judiciously exercise such power.

In concluding this communication, its last words shall be an appeal to the congress for the most rigid economy in the expenditure of the money it holds in trust for the people. The way to perplexing extravagance is easy, but a return to frugality is difficult.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

English Ale Imports.

Vast quantities of English ale, old and pale, and of English "bitter beer" are imported into the United States for domestic consumption, the average importation of such foreign malt liquors amounting in a year to 700,000 gallons in bottles or jugs. The superior, or supposed superior, merits of English ale and beer sustain the demand for it in the United States, but it is a fact not generally known that a very large share of the English ale and beer drank in this country is made from American hops.

Measuring Its Own Velocity.

By means of an electric device experimenters, acting for the United States board of ordance, have recently succeeded in obtaining photographic records of the motion of a projectile while yet inside the bore of a cannon. The projectile carries a rod of wood attached to its front end, and copper rings, encircling this rod at fixed intervals, successively form electric contacts as the rod is driven from the gun. Each of these contacts produces an automatic record on a photographic plate. The Scientific American, in describing the apparatus and experiments, says that the shortest distance traveled by the projectile between two successive records was 3.7 centimetres, which is a little less than an inch and a half, and that some of the time intervals between the records were only one two-thousandth of a second.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction

49 YEARS A SUFFERER.

Sept. 9th, 1896.

DEAR SIRS:—Am 67 years old and began taking your medicine last April for Rheumatism, which I have had for 49 years, also for a weak heart. Since taking "5 Drops" the Rheumatism has all disappeared, the stiffness is gone from my joints, and my heart never misses a beat. I am today a well, strong woman, and I owe it to "5 Drops." I only wish I could sound my bugle of praise loud enough to be heard all over the world, and could convince every one that "5 Drops" is all you claim it to be and more.

TIRED SALESWOMEN.

Interesting Statement by a Young Lady in Brooklyn.

Men formerly held the positions these women now hold, and while women's organism is less strong than men's they are expected to do the same work. Their duties compel them to be on their feet from morning to night, and many of them, in a short time, contract these distressing complaints called "female diseases."

Then occur irregularities, suppressed or painful menstruation, weakness, indigestion, leucorrhœa, general debility and nervous prostration.

"My dear Mrs. Pinkham:—After writing you, and before your answer came, I was too miserable to go to the store, and so lost my position. That was five weeks ago. I am now back again in my old place, and never felt so well in all my life. The bearing-down pains and whites have left me, and I am not a bit nervous or blue. Life looks brighter to me. I don't get tired, my temper is real sweet, and I could scream right out sometimes for joy. Your Vegetable Compound is my standby. You don't know how thankful I am to you for saving me from suffering. Every woman in my position should know of your wonderful remedy. I never saw you, but I love you for being so good to me."—EDITH——W 6th Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Spoken Inadvisedly.

"Jeer at me if you will!" shrieked the horse in impotent anger, as the trolley shot by, "but I will not be cowed!"

The Zeitgeist, however, bethinking himself of the nearby corned beef factory, smiled pityingly.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 7.—The senate was called to order at noon by Vice-President Stevenson, 71 senators being present. At 2 o'clock the president's message was presented and its reading occupied the time until 3:35, when the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

The house was called to order at noon by Speaker Reed. At 2 o'clock the president's message was received and the clerk at once proceeded to read it. Turner of Georgia announced the death of ex-Speaker Crisp, and a resolution reciting that the house heard with profound regret the announcement of his death was adopted. Adjournment was then taken.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Many petitions were presented from manufacturing bodies urging the passage of the Dingley bill. The house resolution relative to the death of ex-Speaker Crisp was laid before the senate. As a mark of respect the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Bill permitting private mailing cards when 1 cent stamp is affixed and bill to provide for an indemnity of not to exceed $10 for the loss of any registered letter, passed. Loud then called up the bill to authorize the collection and delivery of mail in cities, towns and villages where there is no letter carrier service, by private contract between citizens and any individual, the cost not to exceed 1 cent for each letter or package delivered. It passed. Pension appropriation bill, carrying $141,263,880, came up and without amendment was passed. Adjourned.

CAUCUS.

At a caucus of republican senators the Dingley tariff bill was referred to a steering committee with instructions to investigate as to the likelihood of getting it through, and to devise means to amend, if possible. Pacific railroad question was referred to same committee. An immigration bill presented by Lodge was endorsed. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a special committee of five members of this caucus be appointed to recommend a plan whereby legislation may be had at this session looking to an international conference with the leading commercial nations of the world for the promotion of bimetallism.

Dubois, Pettigrew, Mantel, Squire and Teller, the silver men who bolted at St. Louis, were not present and Dubois' resignation as secretary of the caucus was received and accepted

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 9.—Cameron introduced a resolution acknowledging the independence of Cuba. Mills introduced a resolution for occupancy of the island by the United States troops until the Cubans can organize a government. Call also offered a resolution for recognition of the independence of Cuba. The first two were referred to the committee on foreign relations and the last was laid on the table. On motion of Allen, of Nebraska, the senate, by a vote of 35 to 21, took up the Dingley tariff bill. Aldrich moved to recommit the bill to committee on finance with instructions to report it back without amendment. A debate was begun, with Allen holding the floor in opposition to the motion. At 2:30, after a short executive session, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

After passing a number of house bills, most of them relating to local affairs in the territories of New Mexico and Arizona, the house at 2:45 went into committee of the whole to consider and refer the president's message, and then adjourned until tomorrow.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 10.—A resolution for a committee of three to arrange for the inauguration of McKinley was adopted. Cullom offered the following resolution:

Resolved, By the senate and house of representatives, that the extinction of title and the termination of Spanish control of the islands at the gateway of the Gulf of Mexico is necessary to the welfare of those islands and to the people of the United States.

He spoke in favor of the resolution, making a vigorous speech. The speaker did not indicate definitely the method which he thought should be pursued, saying: "The wisdom and discretion of an American president and cabinet can certainly find a way to determine the trouble without imperiling the interests of our country or our people." Call also spoke briefly. Executive session. Adjourned.

HOUSE.

By a vote of 104 to 7, the house passed the bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the capitol. Bill to amend the act forbidding the alien ownership of lands in territories was defeated.

HOUSE.

Washington, Dec. 11.—In his prayer the chaplain gave thanks for the passage of the resolution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the capitol. The house spent the day in consideration of bills on the private calendar. Adjourned till Monday.

NASAL CATARRH FOR YEARS.

So-Called Catarrh Cures Failed to Cure—The True Way is to Take the One True Blood Purifier.

Catarrh is caused by impure blood. The best physicians say so. The only way to cure catarrh is to purify the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh when all other medicines fail, because Hood's Sarsaparilla is The One True Blood Purifier. This is logical, and that it is true is proved by thousands of testimonials like this:

"I was troubled with nasal catarrh for many years. I doctored for it, and at one time took a dozen bottles of a so-called catarrh cure, but without beneficial effect. I had read of cases where others had been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I determined to try it. I took five bottles last year, and was highly pleased with the relief obtained. I have had no particular trouble from catarrh since that time except a slight inflammation when I catch cold. I have proved, in my own case, that Hood's Sarsaparilla will cure catarrh, and I also derived benefit in a general way from its use. It is an excellent remedy, and I am glad to give my experience with it for catarrh for the benefit of those who may be similarly afflicted." MRS. JOHN LEHMAN, 103 Wilkinson St., Goshen, Indiana.

KLEMME IOWA

THE KLEMME TIMES.

KLEMME, - - - IOWA

Getting the big head, shrinks the heart.

A man's luck is generally about as it looks to him.

There are people who acquire importance by being abused.

We are rich, not in what we have, but in what we cannot lose.

Few things are more pitiable than a joker with a joke he has to explain.

There are people who soon acquire grudges against those who help them.

There can be no true and abiding comfort and peace, that is not rooted and grounded in faith.

Turning a mad dog loose is a trifling thing, compared to what the devil can do with a gossiping tongue.

When a man says that nobody cares whether he lives or dies, he isn't advertising himself very well.

A man isn't likely to enjoy hearing his wife talk with a woman who remembers him when he was a boy.

Money is one of the levers that moves the world, and it always moves it in the right direction when a godly man controls it.

Very often when we think we are impressing people with our smartness, we are only making a reputation for being disagreeable.

The reckless and improvident would soon be abandoned if their friends did not secretly hope that they would in time reform and pay for favors received.

While the devil's messengers were telling Job everything had been lost, the Lord's messengers were on the way to say that his gain had been a hundred per cent.

There is said to be one county in Georgia—Charlton—that did not participate in the late election, and the people living in it don't know yet what has happened. Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to vote.

Col. Ingersoll, owing to illness, was obliged to cancel several lectures, whereupon a St. Louis paper suggests that it would be a good time to send him some tracts, as there can be little hope of saving him when he is well.

Another tariff war between Russia and Germany is among the early possibilities. Under the existing arrangement Russia, which has a great surplus of agricultural products to exchange for German manufactures, complains she is getting the worst end of the bargain and talks of placing a big tariff on imports from Germany. In such case the country last named would refuse to buy in Russia and would take more breadstuffs from the United States. Beneficial results from this might be offset in part by Russia's increased offerings of her own grain surplus in western Europe, affording further competition for American grain.

The French convention decreed the adoption of the republican calendar, which counted a period of ten days—a decade it was called—as a week. When the decree was published a witty man, seeing that the division was far from convenient, said: "It's no good; it has two enemies who will never give in—the beard and the white shirt." The wit knew that the laboring class would not only find nine consecutive days too many for them, but that their habit of shaving and putting on a clean shirt every seventh day was too fixed for a convention to eradicate. When Napoleon suppressed the decade and restored the old week, the change met with universal approval.

That the best attainments are not the result of chance was exemplified in the discovery of the planet Neptune, the fiftieth anniversary of which event was recently celebrated in France. Telescopes had long swept the sky without discovering this shy outer planet, but when astronomers noticed how Uranus hastened in one part of his orbit and moved with less rapidity in another, they knew there must be an attracting body that held him in check. Leverrier, therefore, after minute calculations, wrote to the astronomer of the Berlin observatory, requesting him to point his telescope to a particular spot in the sky on an evening indicated, and said: "You will see a planet which I have not seen, and which no human eye has ever seen, but which nevertheless must be on the spot." No one would venture to call its discovery that night an act of chance.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

STABBED NEAR THE HEART.

Youthful Row at Mystic That May End Fatally.

CENTERVILLE, Dec. 18.—A cutting affray occurred at Mystic, in which a boy named Horrock was probably fatally injured. It seems that the Horrock boy and another boy named Gregor were playing together and a dispute arose as to the superior qualities of the knives owned by the boys. They tested the knives in various ways known only to boys, but could not settle the difficulty that way, and a violent quarrel arose, which resulted in the Gregor boy stabbing Horrock in the left breast, just under the heart. The knife was an ordinary one, except that it had a dagger-like blade, about three inches long, and it was driven in to the handle. Physicians say that Horrock cannot possibly recover.

ROMANCE OF THE YEAR.

Governor Drake's Daughter Secretly Married to Geo. Sturdivant.

DES MOINES, Dec. 18.—Miss Mary Lord Drake, daughter of the governor of Iowa, and George Sturdivant of Centerville, were secretly married at Denver on the 28th day of October, nearly two months ago. Governor Drake did not learn of the marriage until his recent visit to Colorado Springs, where his daughter has been spending the winter. The young couple went to school together at Centerville, and while the groom came of a good family the governor's objection to him was that he had no occupation and was not yet established in life. It is said the young couple will live in Moravia, where Mr. Sturdivant will start a bank.

BURNELL SENTENCED.

Must Change His Policy or Serve a Jail Sentence.

DES MOINES, Dec. 20.—Albert S. Burnell, editor of the Inter-State Tracer, of Marshalltown, was sentenced in the federal court to pay a fine of $1,400 and serve six months in the Poweshiek county jail by Judge Woolson. The sentence was suspended on the payment of $400, with the understanding that Burnell is to abolish the most important feature of his paper, the collecting agency, which was severely condemned by Judge Woolson in scathing terms prior to pronouncing sentence.

A SAD STORY.

A Child, Living Near Belinda, Swallows Poison, With Fatal Results.

CHARITON, Dec. 20.—By the carelessness of the mother, the 4-year-old child of George Stranger, living near Belinda, lost its life. A bottle of strychnine was kept in the house for medicinal purposes, and the mother, on going out of the house, left the child alone. In some manner it got hold of the bottle and swallowed a considerable portion of the contents. Medical aid was promptly summoned, but to no avail.

MYSTERIOUS SPENCER MURDER

Deputy County Treasurer, a Young Lady, Kills Herself.

SPENCER, Dec. 21.—Miss Winnie Travers, deputy treasurer of Clay county, committed suicide. She went to the office about midnight, as she said, to attend to some work. When the office was opened in the morning she was found dead with four bullet holes in her body, an empty revolver at her side. Despondency is the supposed cause. She was a very popular young lady.

Defendants in Soldiers' Home Cases Given Time to Demur.

DES MOINES, Dec. 19.—With the consent of United States District Attorney Fullen, the defendants in the case involving Commissioner J. B. Ratekin and other commissioners of the soldiers' home at Marshalltown have been granted additional time within which to file a demurrer before the federal district court. January 15 is the limit of time named by Judge Woolson.

Convict Jumped From a Train.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Dec. 19.—Sheriff Hawkins, of Fayette county, had an exciting experience near Marion. He was taking Ed Ryan, a desperate crook, to the Anamosa penitentiary, and while the train was running thirty miles an hour Ryan suddenly leaped through a window. Hawkins alighted as soon as possible, and after a chase recaptured his man on the roof of a building. Ryan struck on his head and shoulders, but was not injured. He had served a term at Anamosa before, being known there as Flynn.

Did Not Burn Mail.

DUBUQUE, Dec. 19.—Postmaster Smith, of Horton, held to the grand jury on the charge of burning campaign literature sent through the mail, has proved his innocence and escaped indictment.

MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

Defenseless Man Murdered by Two Men Near Oskaloosa.

OSKALOOSA, Dec. 21.—George Golightly, of Carbonado, was murdered about two miles east of Oskaloosa at 9 o'clock p. m. Two couples in a double seated buggy met Golightly on the highway and both men shot at him. One ball pierced his brain and he died instantly. A few hours later George Nettlefield, a young farmer of Wayland, and C. C. Ernest, a young druggist, of the same place, drove into Oskaloosa and were arrested. They confessed that they had had trouble with Golightly and had fired at the ground as he passed, but did not mean to and did not know that they had killed him. Nettlefield did the shooting. They were jailed.

COLLECTIONS WERE HARD.

Randall, Selby & Bell Make an Assignment.

DES MOINES, Dec. 21.—Randall, Selby & Bell, implement and vehicle dealers, made an assignment to B. F. Elbert, who at once took charge. The liabilities are estimated at from $100,000 to $125,000, and the assets are unknown. Mr. Randall says he hopes the firm will make arrangements to resume business at once. Other conservative men doubt this and think the assets will give the creditors not over 75 cents on the dollar, if it amounts to 60. Hard times and inability to make collections is the cause. The firm has branches at Carroll, Guthrie Center, Audubon, Winterset and Ames.

WEYLER HUNG IN EFFIGY.

Silver City, Mills County, the Scene of the Affair.

SILVER CITY, Dec. 18.—Ever since the reported assassination of General Maceo, Silver City has been considerably worked up over the affair, and no one is backward about expressing himself as being willing to help the Cubans, even if arms must be resorted to. The excitement culminated in an effigy of Capt. Gen. Weyler being hung to a telephone pole in the heart of the city. After the crowd had jeered the form for a while they separated to their homes. The hanging was not the work of boys, but several business men had a hand in the affair.

Ottumwa Suspect Innocent.

OTTUMWA, Dec. 19.—Dave Sweeney, a tramp, held for the murder of Andrew Hart, at Lamoille, has been released, officers from Marshall county having failed to identify him as the murderer.

IOWA CONDENSED.

At Independence recently Bert DeWald was found guilty of conspiracy in the assault made last September on J. H. Willey, editor of the Bulletin-Journal. His partner, Charles L. King, was found guilty on the same charge. The verdicts are received with universal satisfaction.

Eighth district democrats met at the Summit house parlors, in Creston to elect a district committeeman in place of E. W. Curry, deceased. Three candidates were presented to the convention. W. T. Davis, of Hamburg, received 42 votes; Editor Brewster, of Creston, 33; and Burg Brown, of Corning, 9.

Des Moines dispatch: The Chicago Chronicle will have to pay Dr. E. J. Moffit $1,999.99 damages, for libeling him in its grave robbing article. The verdict is for the exact amount asked by the attorney for Moffit, and the jury did not take long to deliberate. Probably the sudden disappearance of Bennett, the reporter who jumped the state to prevent criminal prosecution for writing the article, had something to do with it. A. B. Cummings, attorney for the Chicago paper, will take the case to the supreme court.

One of the most brutal murders in the history of Marshall county was committed a few mornings since on the farm of Myron Woodard, eight miles southeast of Marshalltown. Andrew Hart, 24 years old, and living with his parents on the farm, arose to build the morning fire. When he came down stairs he discovered a burglar in the house. Hart was strong, and immediately engaged the burglar in a scuffle. It is supposed that he was getting the best of the burglar, when the latter drew a revolver and shot Hart twice in the breast. Either wound would have been fatal. The burglar then jumped through a window and escaped just as the murdered man's father, attracted by the noise, rushed on the scene. The father followed for a short distance and then returned to find his son dead. The murderer cut his hands when he went through the window and was tracked two miles by the blood, and then the trail was lost. He lost his hat and necktie in the scuffle and left his mackintosh on the fence. These are the only clues to identify him. It is thought he will be captured. Sheriff Mills has offered a reward of $500 for his capture.

ALL OVER THE WORLD

EARTHQUAKES.

Wales, the Midland and South of England Shaken.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Two strong shocks of earthquakes have been felt throughout Wales, the Midlands and the south of England. The first shock occurred at 3 o'clock a. m. and the second at 5:30, the waves passing from west to east. Houses were violently shaken, beds moved from their places, doors forced open and furniture overturned. Telegrams from all quarters concur in the statement that the first shock was of thirty seconds duration and was followed by a loud rumbling sound and minor tremblings of the earth. The second shock was shorter, but more severe. Many people in Windsor, Cheltenham and other places rushed out of their houses, but no one was hurt. The cathedral at Hereford was damaged somewhat, but no other serious damage is reported.

FORTY MINERS KILLED.

Explosion of Fire-Damp in a Coal Mine at Resicza, Austro-Hungary.

BUDA PESTH, Dec. 21.—An explosion of firedamp occurred in a coal mine at Resicza, in the valley of Temes. A large number of men were at work in the mine and forty of them were killed outright. Rescuing parties entered the mine as soon as possible after the explosion and succeeded in taking out eighteen men who were seriously injured. It is known that twenty-seven miners are still entombed, but whether they are alive or not is uncertain. Efforts to reach the part of the mine in which they were working are being made, but the work of rescue is greatly hampered by the bad character of the wreckage and the great volume of afterdamp.

EUROPE WATCHING AMERICA.

Spanish War a Possibility Shown by the Comment.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The papers very generally comment upon the gravity of the situation between the United States and Spain, brought about by the action of the senate foreign relations committee in agreeing to report Senator Cameron's resolution for the recognition of the Cuban republic. They agree, for the most part, in expressing the belief that President Cleveland will veto the resolution if it is sent to him, but that in the present temper of the American people, the resolution will be passed by congress over the veto with the requisite majority.

SHARKEY WINS THE PURSE.

Court Gives Him the Decision on a Small Technicality.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 18.—The fight between Sharkey and Fitzsimmons for possession of the $10,000 purse has been concluded, Judge Sanderson, of the superior court, having dissolved the injunction restraining the Anglo-California Bank from cashing the check. Counsel for Sharkey called the attention of the court to the state law forbidding prize fighting, between which and "a glove contest" he maintained there was no difference, and he therefore argued that a case involving the possession of a purse for prize fighting had no standing in court.

Sugar Bounty Not Collectable.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 18.—The supreme court rendered a decision on the beet sugar bounty law, which, while not passing on the constitutionality of the act, declares the bounty not collectable, inasmuch as the legislature made no specific appropriation for its payment. This means that the sugar factories at Norfolk and Grand Island will lose a sum estimated at $50,000, unless at the coming session of the legislature a specific appropriation is made for their benefit, in which event the constitutionality of the law may be questioned.

Agricultural Appropriation Completed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The house committee on agriculture completed the agricultural appropriation for the coming fiscal year. The measure will carry an appropriation of about $2,300,000—about the same as for the current year. No appropriation for seeds to be distributed by members of congress was asked for by the secretary, but the committee inserted this item, as has been the case before. The bill contains no new legislation.

Demands Weyler's Recall.

MADRID, Dec. 18.—El Correo Militar demands that General Weyler be recalled from Cuba and replaced by General Marin, General Macias, now in command of the troops in the Canary Islands, succeeding the Marquis of Ahumada as second in command.

Young Crisp Elected.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 18.—A special election in the Third congressional district to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Charles F. Crisp, resulted in the election of Charles R. Crisp, eldest son of the distinguished ex-speaker.

HOT BATTLE IN CUBA.

Col. Lara Engages the Insurgents in the Oliver Hills.

HAVANA, Dec. 17.—Col. Lara has had an engagement with the combined parties of insurgents under Mayia, Rodriguez and other leaders, who occupied strong positions in the Oliver hills, near Placetas. The troops made an attack upon the rebel positions, which were stoutly defended. The fighting lasted three hours, when the insurgents were dislodged and dispersed, leaving twenty-four of their dead upon the field, including five chiefs. The troops had one captain and twelve privates wounded.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The Times, in an editorial, says that it thinks that beyond a temporary check of the insurgents, that Maceo's death will change the situation very little. "Spain," says the Times, "must still be alive to the urgency of the problem."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The treasury officials have received official confirmation of the report of the sailing of the Three Friends from Fernandina Harbor, Fla., with a cargo of arms for the insurgents, and the sailing of the cruisers Newark and Key West in pursuit.

PARIS, Dec. 17.—Senor Margill, ex-president of the Spanish republic, and now leader of the republican party in Spain, has a long letter in the Gualois quoting numerous precedents to prove that Europe has no right to complain of American interference in Cuba.

HAVANA, Dec. 19.—It is now established beyond doubt that the insurgents are concentrating their forces in the province of Santa Clara with the intention of apparently moving westward to the provinces of Matanzas and Havana.

BREVITIES.

An explosion occurred in Cremer's Match factory at Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, demolishing the building, killing fifteen women and seriously injuring seven others.

Advices from Sneedville Ky., are to the effect that Marion Hatfield was hanged for the murder of Jones Trell. Five thousand people were present. Hatfield confessed, implicating his wife and a woman named Haney Jordan.

Passengers arriving at Key West from Havana report that Antonio Maceo is alive and well and is in the province of Matanzas. The passengers say that all of the festivities that were going on in Havana to celebrate his death have been ordered stopped since it has become known that he is alive.

Washington dispatch: The monthly statement of the principal articles of domestic exports issued by the bureau of statistics shows that during the month of November the exports were as follows: Breadstuffs, $10,146,060; cotton, $39,504,589; mineral oils, $41,807,147; provisions, $10,429,278; cattle and hogs, $2,314,976; total for the month, $76,202,040.

The secretary of the treasury recently sent to congress estimates of deficiencies in appropriations amounting to $6,691,632 required to meet urgent demands of the government for the service of the current and prior fiscal years. The deficiency in each department is given as follows: Legislative, $6,600; treasury, $1,409,812; war, $3,346,500; navy, $700,000; justice, $734,720.

Senator Allen has introduced a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for surveys and examinations of the head waters of all the large rivers of the country—some 120 being named—beginning with the Penobscot and extending to the Rio Grande, to determine the cost and location of reservoirs to be constructed and maintained for the storage of waters of these rivers and their tributaries, to be used for industrial purposes.

Washington dispatch: The postmaster general has issued an order extending the house-to-house mail collection and delivery system, so as to provide for the sale of postage and special delivery stamps by letter carriers while making their rounds. The scheme is one outlined to the postoffice department six years ago by Postmaster Harlow, of St. Louis. The order will for the present apply to only twenty-five cities.

A Barcelona dispatch says: The court martial of the anarchists arrested for complicity in the recent disturbances in Barcelona has been concluded. The sentences imposed are kept secret. It is believed, however, that twenty-eight of the anarchists have been sentenced to death and fifty-nine to penal servitude. The outrage for which these men were tried was committed on June 7, last, during the religious procession of Corpus Christi. Just as the procession was entering the church of Santa Maria del Mar, a bomb was thrown into the procession and exploded, killing six persons instantly and wounding fifty others.

THE GRAY FALCON

BY M. T. CALDOR.

CHAPTER II.—(CONTINUED.)

"But you cannot imagine how keenly I suffer," sobbed she.

"Can I not? ah, my child, you little guess how thoroughly I read every thought, how I bleed over every inward pang."

"And you do not blame me? Say you do not think I am wrong."

"Not wrong, my precious one, but like the imprisoned bird beating itself uselessly against the bars, very unwise. What is unavoidable must be accepted with the best grace possible. Spare yourself unavailing agony."

"And if I could help it," was Felicie's indignant reply.

"At least, my love, you might try to look upon it in a pleasanter light. Who knows but the marquis may prove your ideal hero? For I am sure there is no real love. I have watched you jealously enough, I hope, to make sure of that."

Felicie's eyes flashed angrily.

"I cannot like him. I detest him—to seek a defenceless, unwilling bride for the sake of her wealth—if he were possessed of all the graces I should abhor him."

"Now, my daughter is unreasonable." was the mild remonstrance.

"But, mamma, is not this way of contracting marriage barbarous and revolting?"

"Yes, my dear, exceedingly so. It is the fault of many years' growth. We in France do not look upon human beings as so many souls, worthy or unworthy; but we rate rank with rank, whether it joins great hearts and puny natures or otherwise. It is a great evil, yet you and I, Felicie, cannot alter it. Your father approves of it, sees no harm in it. You know how thorough an aristocrat he is. I have hitherto tried to conceal from you the pain it gave me to see his lack of sympathy with those below us. It seems the time has come now when your happiness demands a better understanding—"

"I do not need this explanation at least—from a child I have seen the difference in your care for our people, and my father's. I have not always failed to notice the grateful glance of adoring love which follows you from cottage to cottage, nor the angry scowl, or sullen apathy which greets my father's appearance," replied Felicie, gravely.

The countess was silent, lost in a painful revery.

"Oh, mamma, don't think I have not appreciated your noble nature, your generous delicacy, that would never hint to me, nor allow me to refer to, my father's failings. Do you know, I have often wondered how you came to have him, you who must have been so grand and beautiful in your girlhood—"

Felicie spoke timidly, expecting the reproof she immediately received.

"Hush, my child! I cannot listen to a disparaging word. He is your father, my husband. I would indeed he had a more generous forbearance for the down trodden peasant; but we are all sinful in some way—we must forget, we must overlook each other's faults."

"As if there were any fault in your character!" exclaimed Felicie warmly, sinking down into her seat again—her excitement somewhat exhausted.

"Alack, Felicie, if you knew what constant struggling I have endured! But it is of you I am thinking. I have been painfully anxious concerning this engagement; but I build all my hopes upon the marquis; I have only heard favorable accounts of him. Oh, my child, you must learn to love him, you must subdue this wilful objection to one you have never seen, or your happiness will be wrecked. Heaven save you from all I have undergone!"

"You, mamma!" exclaimed Felicie, in astonishment, quite forgetting her own grief in pity for the storm of emotion which the question brought to her usually calm and gentle mother.

"Hush!" said the countess, regaining her composure with a powerful effort. "They are coming with the refreshment tray."

The servants entered, spread out the tiny table with a dainty repast, lighted the scores of candles in two silver candelabra, and vanished again.

"Now, then, you must tell me about it, mamma!" said Felicie when they rose from the table.

CHAPTER III.

THE countess had scarcely touched the food, her face was pale and very sad, as she drew her daughter to her side, and pillowing the bright, young head upon her shoulder, answered:

"Nothing else but your happiness, Felicie, could tempt me to unseal this long closed volume of my experience. Now it seems that a knowledge of my trials will give force to my advice, will teach you to rely upon my sympathy, and, I hope, induce you to follow my instructions. If I thought any effort of mine could induce the count to relinquish this marriage contract I should still keep silent—but I am convinced that, fond as he is of you, he would break your heart before he would forego his ambitious plans for you."

Felicie shuddered and nestled closer in her mother's arms.

"There was a time, my Felicie, when your mother's heart throbbed and beat restlessly against just such an announcement as you have received tonight—but how much more hopelessly, you may imagine, when I tell you her whole affections were given to another—and that the startling revelation only came to her upon the command to receive a husband from her own station."

The daughter reached up to kiss the quivering lips, which spoke these words falteringly.

"My poor little Felicie! you thought I knew not how to pity you, while you are so fortunately ignorant of the fiery pages which I have suffered. There was a pleasant boy, who was a foster brother of my cousin Henri's, and who shared Henri's home and education, who even accompanied him to Germany to the college. It was done with the desire of giving the poor, sickly child of nobility a companion to cheer, amuse and help him. And all Henri lacked Emile possessed. He had a swift, keen intellect, a splendidly developed frame, a wonderfully gentle, refined, and knightly soul. He was absolutely necessary to the comfortable existence of the feeble invalid, and he shared all the advantages of wealth. He dressed like a gentleman, he had an education far above the average, his manners were elegant, his soul was pure. I was constantly with the household. I thought it was a pity for poor Henri, and affection for my cousin Annette, which drew me there, into that happy circle. I never discovered that it was love for Emile, until I was informed by my father that he had accepted the suit of Count Languedoc."

She sighed heavily, and caught her breath quiveringly. Her daughter seized her hand, and covered it with kisses.

"I cannot tell you what strange impulse impelled me to hurry away into the little arbor where Annette and Henri sat listening to Emile's melodious tones as he read to them some old poem, and break upon them the announcement in the most tragic tone. My eyes were upon Emile's face. I saw it turn deadly pale; I saw the spasm of agony shake his strong young frame into the helplessness of childhood. Wretched and selfish that I was, I felt a glow of joy to know that he loved me—that the blow which pierced mine struck home to his heart. He said not a word, but threw down his book, and walked away. Annette looking frightened, went after him, and I threw myself, weeping bitterly, beside Henri. Poor boy! he tried to comfort me—but he had read that one swift look exchanged between Emile and myself, and well understood the depth of my wretchedness. Too well he knew, who had known such a true nobleman with nature's signet, instead of an earthly monarch's, on his brow, could have no heart for a lower union of soul."

"My poor, poor mother!" sighed Felicie, as she wiped away the streaming tears.

"It is of the past I am telling you, my child—not of the present, remember. Emile found means to speak with me alone. He was nearly crazed with grief. He talked bitterly and wildly; alas, truthfully, also, as I acknowledged then and now. What was a paltry coronet, he asked, beside a lifetime of love and happiness? He was not noble born, but he should never be poor. His education, his strength, his talents were an unfailing mine—he would make me happier, as his wife, than the count could with a palace and a crown. I could not contradict him. Then he frantically besought me to fly to the new world, just in the glory of its independence. Oh, my child! Heaven spare you the terrible conflict which shook my very soul! It was a terrible temptation—to leave the harsh, unpitying father, who would wreck my happiness so needlessly, to fly with the one my whole heart clave to. But I was spared the decision. My father had somehow obtained an idea of the cause of my reluctance to fulfil his wishes. He had watched our meeting in the summer house between the two estates. He came upon us like a roaring lion; he heaped upon Emile the most abusive language, the most abhorrent revilings. Emile was like a marble statue, only the nostrils were curved with fiery indignation, and the eyes glowed like balls of fire. He answered not a word—but coming to me, held out his hand, and the hollow despair of the tone haunts me now.

"'It is needless to struggle longer against fate,' said he slowly; 'farewell, Marguerite. Heaven give me all the bitterness, and leave you peace.'

"And before I could speak, he was gone. My father's anger with me was terrible. I was so crushed beneath it, I made no effort to save myself, and more like a corpse than a bride, was brought hither by your father, only two months after Emile's farewell."

"Oh, mamma, mamma, my angel mamma!" sobbed Felicie; "and you have lived till this time—"

The countess smiled mournfully.

"Dear child, grief does not always kill. Moreover, I found a kind friend, just the comforter I needed. The Abbe Recaied is dead now; you will no longer wonder that I hang a wreath every Christmas upon his grave when I tell you he taught me to be at peace again.

"'It was useless to repine, nothing could relieve me now—why not try to find some happiness,' said he, 'since heaven had sent me such a lot?'

"And I saw the wisdom and goodness of the suggestion. Even before you came, my treasure, my jewel, my happiness, I had grown calm and cheerful. I had shut the past from my mind as much as possible, and sought out the pleasures of my lot. Never should I have revealed it to you, but that it seemed to me you needed the lesson. It is even more hopeless now to attempt to escape from your father's will; he can appeal to the king, and compel you to marry as he wishes. For you, my Felicie, is no such trial as I have related; you understand why I have kept you in such strict retirement, why I have watched over you so jealously to prevent your forming any attachment before seeing the marquis—I judged it best, also, that you should not see him before. My child, seek, I implore you, for your own sake—seek to be pleased with him.

Felicie was not ready to return to her own case.

"That noble, generous Emile!" said she; "have you ever seen him since?"

The countess frowned a little, but answered calmly:

"Twice; once when our horse took fright in Paris he rescued me from almost certain destruction; but he never spoke, he thrust me into the count's arms, and vanished in the crowd. Your father does not know of his existence."

"And again, the second time?" persisted Felicie.

"It was here at the chateau. I was leading you down the garden walk when I saw him—grown older and sterner looking—but with the same deep, melancholy eye, standing at the gate watching us."

"And you spoke to him?"

"No, my child, I went away at once; I did not forget that I was Count Languedoc's wife."

"Poor Emile!" sighed Felicie; "I think I should try to comfort him a little if it were me that he loved."

"And the marquis—" said the countess, anxiously.

"Don't talk about him, I pray you. I promise, if my father will not listen to my pleadings, to try to like him. Till then, give me the privilege of detesting him."

CHAPTER IV.

Felicie turned, and kissing her fondly, said earnestly:

"My dear, dear mamma, do not distress yourself for me. I will try to please you—I will promise to obey you. This recital has indeed deepened your authority, as well as increased my love for you. Let us put away the subject until at least there is no escape from it. Have you heard the strange stories afloat around the chateau concerning a visitor to our little forest? whether human or ghostly remains to be determined."

"Certainly not. What can you mean?" replied the mother, looking extremely interested.

"Old Jeannot was my most reliable authority. Victoire came in the other evening, chattering with fear, saying that some calamity was about to befall our family; that all the peasants had seen a dark figure hovering around, which always vanished into air the moment it was approached by any one. I tried to reason her out of the belief, and finding it useless to reprove her firm conviction, I demanded who had set the stories afloat. She named two or three—but Jeannot is such a steady, faithful old man, I selected him from the number, and went at once to accuse him of frightening the silly women. To my astonishment, instead of being ashamed and repentant, he persisted in declaring it was all true."

BIG HUBBUB AT ROME.

Socialists Oppose an Allowance for the Crown Prince.

ROME, Dec. 19.—A sensational scene occurred in the chamber of deputies upon the occasion of the discussion of the allowance to be voted for the use of the prince of Naples, crown prince of Italy. In the course of the debate, Signor Costa, socialist, denounced the proposal to grant an allowance to the crown prince and urged the abolition of all allowance to the crown. Continuing his speech, he declared that the monarch was not only a useless, but a dangerous institution, whereupon the president of the chamber interrupted him and forbade him to speak further. A frightful uproar ensued, deputies jumping over benches and flying at one another's throats, while others exchanged knock-down blows. The tumult lasted some time and when order was restored it was found that several deputies had been very seriously handled. When the chamber became quiet, the Marquis di Rudini, prime minister, attempted to reply to Signor Costa, but his voice was drowned by the shouts and jeers of the socialists. Finally a bill granting an annual allowance of one million francs was carried amid great confusion.

PROSECUTE CUBA'S FRIENDS.

Penalty for Enlisting for Cuba and Against Spain.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The attention of officials here has been attracted by the stories coming from all portions of the country indicating that enlistments are going on of parties of men to go to Cuba to join the insurgents in their struggle against the Spaniards. These enlistments are in direct violation of the neutrality laws and are prohibited under severe penalties. For accepting a commission to serve against Spain, a country with which the United States is now at peace, the penalty prescribed by the revised statutes is $2,000 fine and three years' imprisonment, while enlistment to serve against Spain or hiring any one to enlist, the penalty is almost as heavy, being a maximum of $1,000 fine and three years' imprisonment. The enforcement of these laws naturally falls within the functions of the United States officials, to whose knowledge the attempt at infringement is brought, but if the movements continue on as large a scale as reported, it is probable that the department of justice will send instructions of a special character to all of its agents, calling their attention to the proclamation issued by the president last spring and enjoining upon them a strict enforcement of the neutrality laws.

SUGAR AND COFFEE.

Trust Fighting Arbuckles Forces Prices Down.

TOLEDO, O., Dec. 20.—The American Sugar Refining Company, better known as the sugar trust, has closed a deal for 1,100 shares of stock in the Woolson Spice Company, of Toledo, being eleven-eighteenths of its total stock. The price to be paid is $1,465,000. The story of this gigantic transaction is an interesting one. Some time ago the Arbuckles, "the coffee kings," branched out into the sugar business. A large refinery was built in New York, and thereby the Arbuckles became the competitors of the American Sugar Refining Company. The latter was not at all pleased at what it considered an intrusion. At first the refining company offered to buy out the Arbuckle plant, so the story goes, but the latter refused to sell. Then the refining company concluded to flank the movement of the Arbuckles by branching out in the coffee business, and hence this deal.

TEN THOUSAND MASSACRED.

Turkish Armenian Butcheries Not So Large as Reported, But Plenty.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The full extent of the Armenian massacres is indicated in a report to the state department by United States Consul Bergholtz, at Erzeroum, wherein he says: The number of Armenian children under 12 years of age made orphans by the massacres of 1895, is 50,000, according to the estimates of the missionaries. The question of what shall be done with these orphans is receiving the attention of the Christian world. The American board of commissioners has the question of creating orphanages, clothing factories and industrial institutions under consideration. German charitable or religious societies are preparing to establish orphan asylums, and the British ambassador at Constantinople has initiated a movement leading towards settling a number of widows and their children from the province of Erzeroum on the island of Cyprus.

Olney's Opinion.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Secretary of State Olney says that in his opinion the Cameron Cuban resolution will amount to nothing even if it passes both houses. In his opinion the power to recognize Cuba as an independent state rests exclusively with the president.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 14.—Peffer offered a resolution for the appointment of a national monetary commission. Call offered a resolution declaring the government which permitted the assassination of Maceo "an outcast from the family of nations;" also one authorizing the president to demand the release of all citizens of the United States held in confinement at Ceuta in violation of the treaty with Spain. A resolution for the election of senators by popular vote came up but finally went over. Fifty-five private pension bills were passed and the senate then adjourned.

HOUSE.

Beyond agreeing to a resolution for a two weeks' holiday recess beginning December 23, the proceedings in the house to-day were almost entirely devoid of public interest. Howard offered a resolution for recognition of the independence of Cuba. Bill to prohibit sale of liquor in capitol passed. Army appropriation bill was reported. Adjourned.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Resolution for adjournment from December 22 to January 5 was agreed to. Allen offered a resolution for appointment of a committee to investigate as to what extent money was used in the late election. Referred. A resolution by Morgan calling on the president for certain Cuban correspondence passed.

HOUSE.

Loud's bill designed to correct existing abuses in the transmission of second-class mail matter came up. But little progress was made. Woodman introduced a bill directing the president to intervene in Cuban affairs.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 16.—Vest called up Allen's resolution for consideration of the Dingley tariff bill. Allen questioned Chandler as to the bill's future. Sherman wanted revenues. Teller opposed the bill, as did Gorman. Platt said no effort would be made to urge the bill to passage and in a few words Sherman acknowledged the bill was dead. Pension appropriation bill passed without amendment.

HOUSE.

The army appropriation bill, carrying $23,000,000, came up and was under consideration during the day. Finally the point of no quorum was raised and the house adjourned.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 17.—House bill to amend immigration laws came up and was amended so as to make the limit of exclusion above 16 years, and giving the secretary of war power to except from exclusion persons fleeing from tyranny or the results of war. The bill, which is a substitution for the house immigration bill, was then passed and sent to conference. Executive session. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.

An amendment to the army appropriation bill to except the army and navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., from any benefit in the appropriations for hospitals carried, and the bill was then passed. The day was devoted to District of Columbia business.

HOUSE.

Washington, Dec. 18.—Most of the day was spent in passing thirty-seven pension and relief bills. An evening sesssion was devoted to the consideration of private pension bills.

CUBAN RESOLUTIONS.

Wathington, Dec. 18.—The senate committee on foreign relations, by a practically unanimous vote ordered a favorable report to be made to the senate on the following resolution:

Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States, That the independence of the republic of Cuba, be and the same is hereby acknowledged by the United States of America.

Section 2. That the United States will use its friendly offices with the government of Spain to bring to a close the war between Spain and Cuba.

Secretary of State Olney was present and argued against the resolution but his arguments were of no avail.

HOUSE.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Urgent deficiency bill was reported and after consideration was passed. Bill appropriating $130,000 to enable the government to make an exhibit at the Tennessee centennial exposition at Nashville next year passed.

Hermann Dead.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 18.—Hermann, the magician, died in his private car near Salamanca. He was on his way to Bradford, after having completed an engagement. Death was caused by heart disease.

Roswell G. Horr Dead.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 19.—Ex-Congressman Roswell G. Horr died last night after an illness of two weeks with bronchitis and Bright's disease.

The little girl of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Lewis, of this city, met with a sad accident last Thursday. She was playing with an open knife and accidentally fell, the blade striking her eye, cutting a deep gash in same. The doctor was called, but the ball had oozed out of the socket and had to be cut out. This is a sad misfortune for the little one. Parents should be more careful about letting small children have such things to play with.—Estherville Democrat.

The man who is not willing to live without sin, may always have to live with it.

MISS RHODA'S MEASURE.

Miss Rhoda sat in the west doorway. Her face was turned toward the sweet sky, radiant with its rays of red and golden light; it was nature's "withdrawing season." At Miss Rhoda's right was a field of stubble from which the wheat had been harvested. At her left the corn still stood, like Indian wigwams, all over the field, waiting for the husking time. At her feet the maple leaves, so gorgeous in their autumnal plaids, were falling. Here and there the note of a stray bird which had tarried later than its fellows fell upon her ear. There was a chill in the air; the wind was rising, and it stirred the locks of silvery hair which usually lay with such calm precision about Miss Rhoda's face. She folded her black shawl closer about her shoulders, but still she lingered.

There was no kindly voice to warn her of the dangers that might come from longer exposure. No loved form to come to the door and say, "Come in, now; the air is chill and the fire is burning brightly. It is lonely in the room without you." Miss Rhoda was alone in the world; she had outlived those nearest and dearest to her.

In the afterglow of the lives of those who had belonged to her in the old home sweet memories lighted up the closing day, and as she looked intently at the western sky she seemed to see a vision of the pearly gates, behind whose portals those loved ones were dwelling. Watching the red and gold light fade away, and the darkness gather, she, like Christian, "fell sick" at the glimpse of the glories and wished she could be among them.

As she turned and went into the house, there was a look on her face which, if an artist had caught it at that moment, might have inspired him to paint a picture and call it Renunciation. The most notable thing after one has grown old is the fact of renunciation. But in some lives, like that of Miss Rhoda, it is a more deeply felt fact than in others.

"I was passing Miss Rhoda's house just at sunset to-night, and I saw her sitting at her west door," said Mr. Bates, as he sat down at the supper table. "I know she was trying to work out the kinks and knots about that mortgage on her place. But old Tom Carpenter will foreclose when the time comes. She can't expect any mercy from him; he is too close-fisted for that."

"Dear me!" exclaimed Miss Martha Bates; "what will become of her,"

"She will have to go to the town-house, I suppose. It will be very hard for her; Miss Rhoda was always a high-strung woman," her brother replied.

"And after all that woman has done to help other folks when they were in trouble!" exclaimed Mrs. Bates. "Think how she took in those Butler children and kept them after their mother died; and how she kept that young man who was too sick to work all winter. An own mother couldn't have done more for him. I declare if Miss Rhoda has to give up her place and go on the town at her age, it will be a shame."

"Doesn't the Bible say, 'With what measure ye meet it shall be measured to you again?'" asked Arthur, the tall boy at his mother's right. "How do you reconcile that passage of scripture with Miss Rhoda's prospects of going to the town-house? All my long life I have looked upon Miss Rhoda as one of the fireside saints of the earth; she has always been in some good work, and has had a kind word for everybody."

Aunt Martha did not like the spirit of criticism which her nephew had shown of late about reconciling statements of the Holy Scripture. She spoke up in a quick way and said, "Miss Rhoda hasn't gone to the town-house yet."

"No; but the finger on the signboard points that way," replied Arthur.

"It is dreadful for old people to be obliged to give up their home and old associations and go 'where they would not,'" said Mrs. Bates. "Young folks can bear changes—many really enjoy them—but it is different with the aged."

Aunt Martha had not married—her acquaintances called her "a maiden lady." It was not because she never had opportunities to marry, she told her nephews and nieces, but because she loved them too well to break her home ties with them. It had long ago been settled that the Bates family could not do without Aunt Martha, and Aunt Martha could not get along without them. "How dreadful it must be," was her thought that night. "to have no lovelight in one's life."

"THE LORD STAYED HIS HAND."

Then Miss Martha sat down and wrote a letter to her brother John, who lived in the city. She told him of Miss Rhoda; what a patient, faithful life hers had been, and now, just as nearing the end of the journey, she must be forced to give up her home and go to the town-house. Then she added, "John, you and I must pay off that mortgage, and give Miss Rhoda the home for her life. We are able; let us be willing to do it. What a joyous Christmas we shall have if we do this! Miss Rhoda must have the measure meted out to her that she has meted out to others."

The result was that Brother John who was quite apt to act on sister Martha's suggestions, joined her in the labor of love for her neighbor. When Miss Martha went over to see Miss Rhoda, a short time before the foreclosure of the mortgage, she found her looking over her things—she could not carry many with her; for the room was small she expected to occupy. But there was this little memento and that gift with sweet memories associated about them which made it a hard matter to decide what to take and what to give up. There was the mother's old workbasket, once so full of the making and mending for the loved ones, and her copy of "Daily Food" lying in it, and father's well-thumbed Bible, with here and there words of comfort and explanation written on the margins—those of course must go with her.

Tear-marks were on Miss Rhoda's face as she offered the mother's rocker to her visitor.

"Yes, Miss Martha, I'm getting ready to move. It's something I never did before, and it's sort of trying. But I'm thankful I don't feel so unreconciled and unhappy about it as I thought I should when I first made up my mind that there was nothing else I could do. My eyes are so poor I can't sew any more. I say with John Bunyan, 'Perhaps my way to heaven lies through this very valley.' It is just as near the town-house, heaven is, as it is to my old home here, but then—well, I won't say one word against the Lord's dispensations. The Lord keepeth the feet of his children. If this is his way for me to walk, I hope he will give me strength to follow without faltering step."

"But, my dear Miss Rhoda, it is not going to be the Lord's will for you to leave your old home; you are to stay in it as long as you live."

When Miss Martha told her how her home had been secured to her, she exclaimed, "I never thought before how Abraham must have felt when he was ready to sacrifice Isaac and the Lord stayed his hand!"

It was Arthur who planned a housewarming for Miss Rhoda on Christmas eve. The young men and young women of the church and town filled her woodshed with wood and coal, and her cupboard-shelves with things needful for the necessities of the body. The fathers and mothers joined in the work of love, and there was never such a thorough house-warming done in that locality before. A new light came into Miss Rhoda's face that Christmastide. It was lovelight—she was not alone in the world any longer; she belonged to her good neighbors, and they belonged to her.

When the Christmas bells rang in the church belfry on Christmas morning the people heard them with gladness, and thanked the Lord that they had been enabled to help return Miss Rhoda's measure running over full.

Christmas Kindnesses.

At this season of the year, remember that it is your duty as children, and also your privilege, to glorify God, to promote peace, and to extend good will to those around you. You may promote the blessing of peace on earth by frankly forgiving those who may grieve or annoy you, by persuading enemies to be reconciled to each other, and by daily prayer to God to preserve the nations of the earth from the deadly horrors of war. And you may in a great many ways show good will to men. Are there not poor people within a short walk of your own door who will receive no Christmas cards, no nice presents of food or good clothing, whose children have no nice toys or picture books, of which some of you have such an abundance that you scarcely know where to find room for? —Christian Herald.

What Makes a Happy Christmas.

It does not require much money, nor indeed any money, to make a happy home circle on Christmas. The chief thing is a warm and merry heart. It will devise ways and means for filling the home with cheer, joy and gladness. A little invention, a little effort, and much love will give the day a halo brighter than tinsel and gold. God did not require extra material to paint every tree and bush in all this region a crystal whiteness the other night. He used only a little moisture and a little cold, and in the morning men exclaimed in wonder, "What beauty!" So the simple things beautify and glorify the home, and make holidays bright with joys beyond the purchase of money.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

METHINKS I hear the rumbling car
As time sweeps on its way to-night,
And feel the thrills that jerk and jar,
And almost set my thoughts to flight.

I would not look adown the track
That measures all life's weary years;
Nor would I call one moment back
With all its train of pain and tears.

Yet I may look with hopeful sight,
Expectant of that fairer day
When darkness vanishes in the light
Of coming Christmas' hallowed ray.

Oh, Christmas Day! The guileless heart
Of childhood thrills with roseate dreams
Of merry hours; the larger part
Of bliss is what to them it seems.

We almost hear the distant bells
As reindeer steeds prance through the snow;
And eager urchins haste to tell
How swiftly they come and go

How through the winter's snow and sleet
The aged driver, clad in furs,
Heeds not the cold nor chimney's heat,
But comes as sure as roll the years.

He brings the gifts of sweets and toys,
Piled to profusion in his sleigh;
Gifts for the girls and for the boys,
And gifts for older ones than they.

But when he comes, the boys and girls
In sweetest dreams are being led Through dreamland's castles; on their curls
The light of Christmas cheer is shed.

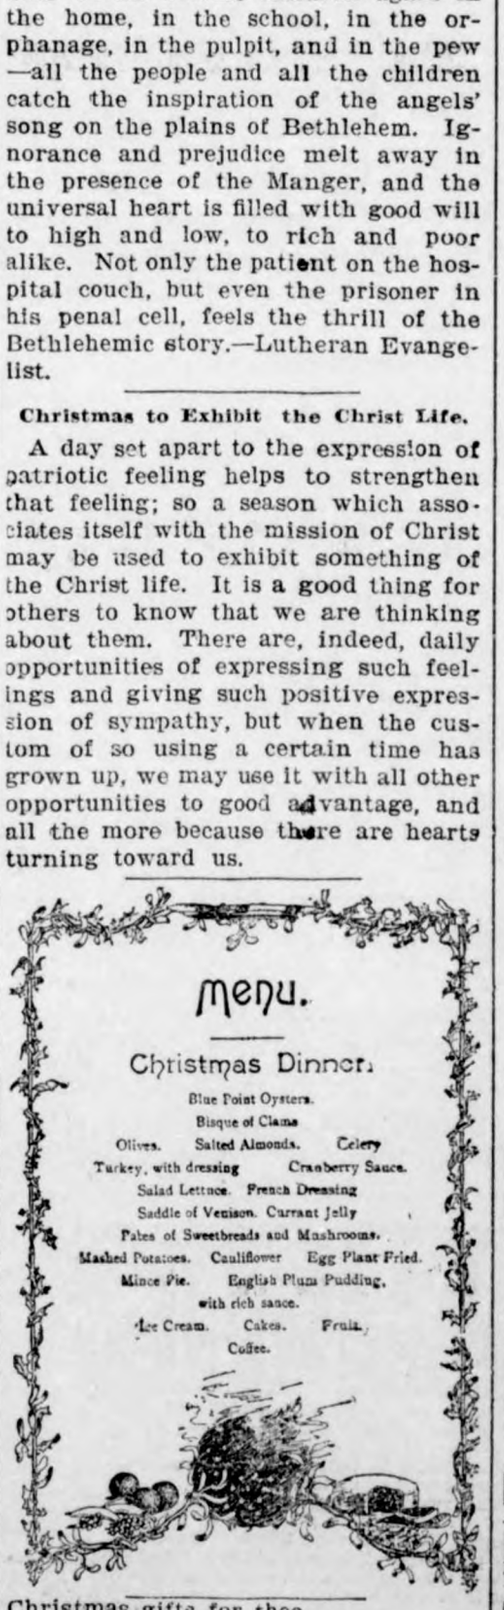
Night passes on; the day is born,
The gladsome hours of joy begun;
Another auspicious Christmas morn
Has come to magnify the "Anointed One."

The Christmas Festival.

To-day in every land where Christ is known, and by believers of every name, Christmas is becoming more and more the festival of festivals in which all rejoice. It is not only pre-eminently the children's festival, but at Christmas we all become children again in the home, in the school, in the orphanage, in the pulpit, and in the pew—all the people and all the children catch the inspiration of the angels' song on the plains of Bethlehem. Ignorance and prejudice melt away in the presence of the Manger, and the universal heart is filled with good will to high and low, to rich and poor alike. Not only the patient on the hospital couch, but even the prisoner in his penal cell, feels the thrill of the Bethlehemic story.—Lutheran Evangelist.

Christmas to Exhibit the Christ Life.

A day set apart to the expression of patriotic feeling helps to strengthen that feeling; so a season which associates itself with the mission of Christ may be used to exhibit something of the Christ life. It is a good thing for others to know that we are thinking about them. There are, indeed, daily opportunities of expressing such feelings and giving such positive expression of sympathy, but when the custom of so using a certain time has grown up, we may use it with all other opportunities to good advantage, and all the more because there are hearts turning toward us.



Christmas gifts for thee,
Fair and free!
Precious things from the heavenly store
Filling thy casket more and more;
Golden love in divinest chain,
That never can be untwined again;
Silvery carols of joy that swell
Sweetest of all in the heart's lone cell

FAMOUS ASTROLOGER GIVES SOME FREE READINGS.

How the Lives of Men and Women Are Influenced by the Signs of the Zodiac —Revival of the Ancient Art of the Egyptians.

ASTROLOGY: This art or science enables the astrologer to read from the horoscope, or map of the heavens at the time of a person's birth, many useful, curious and important things relating to one's life, characteristics, health, wealth, business, marriage, etc. The facts and evidence will justify at all times and to all persons the conclusion that some are naturally fortunate while others are just the opposite and some just an average. The astrologer always finds a marvelous sympathy existing between the indications of horoscope and the life of the person born at any particular time.

For the benefit of the readers of this paper we will publish FREE in these columns: The zodiacal sign rising at your birth including your ruling planet and a brief character reading by Astrology. Those wishing readings should send the following data written plainly in ink: Sex, race or nationality, place of birth including state, county and city, year, month, date, hour and minute of birth, A. M. or P. M. as near as possible; also give name or initials and address under which you wish your reading published. If you know the date but do not know the time of birth and wish a reading send two 2-cent stamps for further instructions. Letters will be numbered as received and the readings published in regular order so those wishing to take advantage of this liberal offer should write at once for we can only allow one column in each issue for this department. Address Prof. G. W. Cunningham, Dept. 4, No. 194 South Clinton St., Chicago, Ill.

Note:—The following readings are given according to data furnished. The description may vary slightly in some points in accordance with which sign the ruling planet may be found. It always partakes of the indications of the sign in which it is placed at birth, also the planets in configuration with it:

Miss Mary, Detroit.

You have the zodiacal sign Sagittarius, which Jupiter rules, rising at your birth, and therefore Jupiter is your ruling planet or significator. Sagittarius usually denotes a person above medium height; a well proportioned and commanding figure; the complexion clear and healthy; the hair near a chestnut color growing thin and forming a notch above the temples; the forehead is full and broad; the eyes expressive; the laugh is loud, merry and cheerful; you are jovial, happy, generous and charitable; you are kind to animals and fond of a fine horse; you are not as conservative as you should be and are liable to get into too large deals; you are a natural leader and have plenty of courage to carry any scheme through that you know is legitimate; you always have a certain kind of good luck that does not seem to come to others; you may apparently be on the brink of a financial precipice and just ready to tumble over, yet something will turn in your favor and pull you through all right.

Paul G., Chicago.

You have the zodiacal sign Taurus, which Venus rules, rising at your birth, and therefore Venus is your ruling planet or significator. The sign Taurus usually denotes a person with short, but full, strong and well-set stature; broad forehead; dark, curly hair; dark complexion; broad full chest and shoulders; short thick neck; wide nose; full, pouting lips; you will have a habit of shaking your head sideways when talking earnestly. You are very quiet, peaceable and patient in your disposition, have great love for the beautiful in art and nature; you are very fond of the fine arts, such as music, painting, drawing, sketching, etc. You are fond of good living and generally manage to get it; you are subject to attacks of the blues without any apparent good cause. You seldom lose control of your temper, yet when you do you become furious. You dislike to change your business or location and have great love for home and its pleasant surroundings.

BRAVE SPIRITS BROKEN.

Before the morning is very old, the dreadful BACKACHE appears, the brave spirit sinks back in affright; no matter how hard she struggles, the "clutch" is upon her, she falls upon the couch, crying:—"Why should I suffer so? What can I do?"

An Irish observer estimates that wasps captured between 300 and 400 flies on two of his cows in about twenty minutes. OUR ENEMY STOLE IN

An enemy stole into your house one day last week and touched you lightly in passing. You thought little of the matter at the time, for the enemy was only a vagrant current of air. But now you are beginning to learn what mischief the little intruder did, for your back is stiff and painful. Your head aches, and at times you feel dizzy. What has happened? Simply this: the cold has settled on your kidneys. They are overcharged with blood and inflamed. Instead of passing the waste matter out of the body they are damming it up in the blood. Every minute, yes, every heart beat adds to the poison in you. Normal action of the kidneys will purify the blood. Nothing else will.

KLEMME, . . . IOWA

Perhaps more good might be accomplished by ringing a curfew for grown people.

The strong point in many a man's career is that he was too weak to do any harm.

The world will tolerate a great deal of nonsense from people who pay cash for their fun.

You can make lots of headway sometimes by admitting you are wrong when you are not.

People generally appear funniest to their neighbors when they are doing something in all seriousness.

People expect too much credit for behaving themselves properly, when in fact it is really a debt they owe to society.

Too many people feel it incumbent on themselves to declare that every little accident is the worst calamity they ever saw.

The Tennessee centennial exposition which is to open at Nashville, May 1, 1897, will, it is said, throw open its gates without a dollar of indebtedness. This will be the greatest financial show ever seen.

A Pittsburg burglar's weakness for pumpkin pie got him into trouble last week. While robbing a house he found a big, thick, yellow disk of pastry in the pantry and stopped long enough in the performance of his duties to bite a section out of it. He was in too great a hurry to eat the whole pie, and left the prints of his teeth in the part remaining. A colored man was suspected. His teeth filled the indentations. He is now in jail charged with robbery.

The words resident and citizen are often used interchangeably in popular speech, but where exactness of statement is required the terms cannot be made synonymous. A verdict was obtained in the United States circuit court for injuries received in an accident. The case was appealed by the corporation. In reviewing the bill to formulate the appeal, the lawyers of the company found that the plaintiff was alleged to be a "resident" of a certain state, and they claimed that a "resident" was not necessarily a "citizen," as required by law. The presiding judge sustained this view and set aside the verdict, and likewise permitted the bill to be amended. The suit was thereupon compromised, and as a result the plaintiff received a few hundred dollars instead of the thousands secured by the original verdict.

Regarding the fact that last year we had the largest apple crop on record, the following facts concerning this toothsome fruit will be welcomed by many. The Chicago Times-Herald is responsible for their truthfulness: "Patriots who set themselves to the pleasant task of helping to consume this home product will kill two birds with one stone. The 'other bird' in this case is the doctor. The apple has remarkable medicinal properties. It excites the action of the liver, purifies the blood, obviates indigestion, helps the kidney secretions, and is a preventive of throat diseases. It is an excellent brain food, abounding in phosphoric acid in easily digestible shape. Next to the lemon and orange it is the best antidote for the thirst and craving of persons addicted to alcohol and opium. It should be eaten just before going to bed, as it promotes sound and healthy sleep."

There is a great complaint abroad, says an exchange, about the way some of the canned goods are put up. It is claimed by a New York paper, that has been making a special study of this question, that the most poisonous chemical changes take place when fish, meats, fruits and vegetables come in contact with the ordinary tinware used by canning factories and through stale goods. For instance, the New York Evening Post publishes an account of the conditions under which lobsters are prepared for the market and canned in different factories on the continent. It (the Post) describes the factories and methods as follows: The so-called factories are mere weather shelters. They are dirty and abound with vermin. There is not a firm in London, New York, Boston or even Paris but has complained of the dirty state of the packing, and thousands of cases are yearly classed unsalable, unless at very much reduced rates. There is no restrictive legislation over the methods used in canning, for the lobsters are caught, canned, packed and carted away while the guardians are snug in bed.

THE NEWS IN IOWA

HELD FIVE MEN AT BAY.

Violent Actions of an Insane Farmer Near Iowa City.

IOWA CITY, Dec. 25.—Insane, desperate and resisting, Clarence Strange, a prominent farmer, aged 40, was arrested by sheriff Clark and taken to the county jail. Strange had held five men at bay and chased his aged mother out of the house, brandishing on ax over her head. After his arrest he was adjudged insane and taken to the asylum at Mt. Pleasant, where he had been incarcerated before. His violent outburst was preceded by curious hallucinations which led him to believe that plotters were endeavoring to rob him of his farm and kill his brother. He also claimed direct communication with God.

GILBERT FELL DOWN.

Outshot at Every Turn by J. L. Winston at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—In a match of 100 clay birds, expert rules, and 100 live birds, association rules, total score to count, for $100 a side, shot at Burnside, John L. Winston defeated Fred Gilbert by a score of 158 to 151. The live birds were shot first, and at the end of 100 birds Winston led by thirteen, having made a score of eighty-one. In the clay bird match, however, Gilbert was the leader, and at the end had killed six more than Winston. His score was eighty-three out of a possible 100.

PUSHED FROM A TRAIN.

A Grinnell Man Badly Injured By an Unknown Person.

GRINNELL, Dec. 27.—Tom Wiley, a stone cutter in the employ of Liens & Hudson, was dangerously cut about the neck and face. He was on his way home from Montezuma on a train and quarreled with some unknown person, resulting in being knifed and pushed from the train near Dodge's mill. His assailant has not been arrested, as his name and whereabouts are unknown. Wiley is confined to his bed.

W. S. Richmond Again.

DES MOINES, Dec. 25.—Auditor McCarthy, through the attorney general, has begun suit in the district court to wind up the affairs of the National Reserve Life Association, of Des Moines. The association since April has been under the management of W. S. Richmond. The auditor charges fraud in misappropriating funds, and claims that the association has not 250 members, as required by law to do business. Richmond says he took hold of the company to build it up, but found it impossible, and has done nothing with it; that there are no policies in force; that there are no assets, and that the best possible thing that could happen is to have the affairs brought to a close by a receiver. He denies that any wrong has been committed or that anyone has suffered loss.

Burglary at Perry.

PERRY, Dec. 24.—The large department store of this city was entered by burglars and goods to the amount of $500 taken. The supposition is that the perpetrator secreted himself in the building during business hours, as the large door which fastens the back of the grocery department was the only opening which was not securely fastened the next morning.

Fatally Injured by Cars.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Dec. 24.—John Thompson, a hardware merchant of Rockford, was in the city on business and when trying to board a moving freight train on the Burlington road to return home, he fell under the cars, getting his head considerably bruised, so that the brains could be seen. It is not believed that he can recover.

Sioux City Man Commits Suicide.

SIOUX CITY, Dec. 26.—G. M. Needham, well known here, committed suicide by strychnine poisoning. His condition was discovered in time to save him had he not refused an antidote. He was a Mason and a resident of Iowa for thirty years.

Grimm the Champion Shot.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Charles H. Grimm, of Clear Lake, Iowa, is the champion trap shot of America. In the match between Grimm and Dr. Carver, at 100 live birds for $200 a side and the championship of America, Grimm won by a score of 98 to 96.

Road Held Responsible.

DENISON, Dec. 25.—At the coroner's inquest held over the remains of Mrs. Henry Krauel, who was killed on a C. & N. W. railway crossing, while attempting to cross the track ahead of a fast freight, the company was found responsible for carelessness.

Prisoner in Cascade Jail Suffocated.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Dec. 24.—George Greek, confined in the town jail at Cascade on a charge of intoxication, set fire to the bed clothes and was suffocated before being discovered. He leaves a wife and several children.

SHOT BY HER BROTHER.

Playing With a Revolver Which Was Not Loaded.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—While two children named Demorest—a boy of 7 and a girl of 5—were playing with a 32-calibre pistol, the boy pointed it at the little girl with the remark, "I can shoot you." The pistol went off, the ball striking her in the forehead. A physician was called, but could not remove the bullet, an attempt being certain to hasten death. The physician says she cannot live.

ALLEGED MURDERER.

J. F. Taylor Captured and Accused of Attempting to Kill.

OTTUMWA, Dec. 24.—The officers captured J. F. Taylor at Ioka. Taylor is wanted for shooting his divorced wife and Frank McElree in Keokuk county some time ago. There was a reward of $100 for the capture of the attempted murderer.

Jury Failed to Agree.

MUSCATINE, Dec. 28.—In the famous case of state of Iowa vs. Adam Vondrosky, the jury was called in after having deliberated twenty-four hours at the close of a week's trial, and discharged, having failed to agree. Vondrosky was indicted for having participated in blowing up with dynamite the homes of John Mahin, E. M. Messenger and N. Rosenberger, three leading prohibitionists, May 11, 1893. The case will be retried next month.

Accidentally Killed Himself.

IDA GROVE, Dec. 28.—Vern. Hull, living three miles north of town, killed himself accidentally. He had an old gun that had been loaded for a long time. The gun was over his head when he fired it off. It exploded, crushing his head and killing him instantly.

An Ottumwa Failure.

OTTUMWA, Dec. 28.—Chas. Bachnan, the oldest jewelry house in Ottumwa, has been closed by the sheriff. The failure was caused by the hard times and close money market. Liabilities, $12,000; assets will hardly cover them.

IOWA CONDENSED.

The winter attendance at Highland Park College, Des Moines, is steadily increasing and the school is prospering finely. That school's excellent system whereby students may enter at any time will enable many to begin work after the hoidays.

Leon dispatch: The discovery of a second and recent will executed by the late E. W. Curry has created quite a sensation. By the terms of this will Curry's former typewriter gets $3,000 and his private library. The widow will contest and a law suit is probable.

Thirty prisoners at the Wapello county jail rebelled and refused to work. The turnkey and a number of police officers shut the prisoners up in their cells and then thoroughly searched their persons. Three razors, two steel traps and a bunch of wire keys were found. It is believed that they were about to make an attempt to escape. The articles were smuggled in by friends of prisoners, who expect to go to prison for long terms after court meets.

At Denison recently Henry Krauel, a German farmer living four and a half miles south of town, with his wife and 18-months-old child, were in a top buggy returning home, when, on starting across the Northwestern track, the head section of train No. 19, going down grade at the rate of about twenty miles an hour, struck the team, hurling it a distance of 150 feet, and tearing the buggy into kindling wood. Mrs. Krauel, being on the inside, was horribly mangled, her skull being badly fractured and her left leg crushed to a jelly. She was picked up and carried to the depot, and died in about thirty minutes. Mr. Krauel escaped with a broken leg and some bruises about the head. The little child was not hurt.

Des Moines dispatch: Judge Spurrier, in a straight forward written ruling, struck a body blow at Governor Drake, Adjutant General Wright and their appointee, James A. Guest of Burlington, now in command of the First Brigade, I. N. G. The demurrer of Attorney General Remley in the effort to prevent General John R. Prime from securing a commission as commander of the First Brigade is overruled. The court practically finds the second election governs the case and this was in favor of Prime by twenty-two votes. If the governor and attorney general choose to stand on the demurrer the court will at once issue the order of mandamus prayed for by General Prime to canvass the votes of the second election. The attorney general's pleadings admit Prime got the most votes and this means an order for the commission of Prime. Then it will remain to be seen if the order is obeyed. On the other hand the attorney general may choose to try the case and introduce evidence. If this is done it will come up at once.

WEYLER AT MARIEL.

Leaves Havana and Resumes the Offensive.

HAVANA, Dec. 23.—Captain General Weyler, accompanied by his staff, and his son, Don Fernando Weyler, who recently arrived in Cuba from Spain, left Havana on board the transport Legazpi, proceeding direct to Mariel. General Weyler was received at Mariel by Gen. Arolas and proceeded to the field of military operations.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—Soliel says if the United States recognized the independence of Cuba, European opinion would unanimously support Spain against America.

KEY WEST, Dec. 25.—Passengers from Cuba report that the Three Friends expedition was landed at Guaboya. They also say the insurgents have burned a monastery near Morro castle, on Havana bay, within range of the guns of the castle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—It is officially denied that any foreign government has directly or indirectly made any representation whatever to the United States to prevent free action in connection with the Cuban insurrection, as alleged in a Paris dispatch in the London Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28—The secretary of the treasury has received official notice of the seizure of the filibustering steamer, Three Friends.

SPAIN'S ARMY ROUTED.

The Insurgents Are Winning Victories in the Philippines.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 24.—Private advices from Manilla, Philippine Islands, have reached here and are verified by accounts that appear in the Hong Kong press received per Belgic. The News contained in the communication deals with the attack by the Spanish on the Noveleta islands and the attempt of the Spanish to dislodge the insurgents in Cavite and Vijo. At the end of the campaign, which lasted until Nov. 14, the Spanish authorities sent out dispatches reporting that the attack had been successful, and that the rebel loss was very heavy. The Spanish claims to have lost about 35 killed and 100 wounded. It is learned that the great victory that the Castilians predicted ended in ignominious defeat. The rebels held Noveleta against warships and troops, and the Spaniards retired after suffering a heavy loss.

MINERS KILLED.

Terrific Explosion of Fire Damp in Indiana.

PRINCETON, Ind., Dec. 28.—A terrific explosion of fire damp occurred in the Maule coal mine, and as a result eight or nine men were instantly killed and four were injured, one of the latter being dangerously hurt. Rescuing parties were at once set to work and at a late hour there were but two or three bodies missing. The men were removing the debris caused by a similar accident but a few days previous.

STARVING IN ARKANSAS.

Drought and Crop Failure Cause Shocking Conditions.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 24.—A large number of families living in Union county are in a destitute condition, and many of them are absolutely starving. Their unfortunate condition is due to the failure of crops in that section last season, caused by the severe drought. A mass meeting at Eldorado has been called to ask the state legislature, the governor and congress for relief.

O'MALLEY IS INDICTED.

Prominent Chicago Alderman Charged With Murder.

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—As the result of information gained recently by Police Inspector Schaack from two non-resident witnesses, the grand jury voted an indictment against Thomas J. O'Malley, alderman from the Twenty-third ward, charging complicity in the murder of Gus Colliander, a saloonkeeper and Twenty-third ward politician, on election night, November, 1894.

To Be Placed in a Sweat Box.

CHICAGO, Dec. 57.—Benjamin B. Jones, ex-paying teller of the National Bank of Illinois, which failed recently, has been arrested on an old charge and the police authorities believe that they can compel him to divulge certain irregularities in connection with the bank officials.

Union Miner Shot.

LEADVILLE, Col., Dec. 27.—Patrick Carney, a union miner, was shot and killed at his own doorstep by four Missourian non-unionists. The soldiers, hearing the shots, charged on the four men and arrested them. Trouble is feared from the outbreak.

France and England.

PARIS, Dec. 24.—The Figaro intimates that owing to the difficulties between France and Great Britain in regard to Egypt and Turkey the post of French ambassador to St. James may be left vacant for awhile.

TURKEY AGAIN.

Powers Are Convinced That the Sultan is Trifling.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—The powers have finally become convinced the sultan's promises amount to nothing, and they are determined to begin a policy of coercion. Salisbury summoned the ambassadors and communicated to them the views of the British government of definite proposals to Russia for a joint intervention in order that each might communicate them to their own government and secure instructions. There is reason to believe that unless the sultan within ten days shows a deference of which he is little suspected very decisive steps will be taken by the joint powers.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 24.—The ambassadors accredited to the porte received instructions from their respective governments to act in concert in submitting fresh proposals for reforms in the Ottoman empire and all of the diplomats, including M. Nelidof, the Russian ambassador, have agreed to resort to coercive measures if the sultan should be dilatory in enforcing the reforms.

TRAIN ROBBERY IN MISSOURI.

KANSAS CITY, Dec. 24.—Blue Cut, made historic through the operations there of the James and Younger bands, when they were pioneers in the train robbing industry, has again been the scene of a hold-up. The St. Louis & Chicago express, which left Kansas City at 8:45 p. m., was flagged at Blue Cut and came to a standstill. The robbers then uncoupled the express car from the train and ran it and the engine a few miles east, where they were stopped in a cut. Then they entered the car and, overpowering the messenger, took the keys of the safe from him. In a few minutes they had secured the contents, believed to be several thousands of dollars, whereupon they uncoupled the engine, ran it a couple of miles down the track and abandoned it. No clue.

BREVITIES.

Consul General Fitz Hugh Lee has returned to Havana.

An irade has been issued by the sultan of Turkey granting amnesty to all Armenian prisoners except those sentenced to death for murder. The terms of the amnesty include about 100 Armenians under sentence of death for other offenses than murder.

Grecian advices state that a fight occurred at Phrophetalias, in the Olympias district, between a Turkish detachment, eighty strong, covering a Turkish investigation committee of eight Turkish officials, and a Greek insurgent band under Veloudas. The whole of the Turkish committee and twenty-four of the Turkish detachment were killed, the insurgents losing only four killed.

Madrid dispatch "In order to insure the success of the next loan, the government is straining every nerve to conceal the true situation in the Philippines. The whole colony is in a revolt and scattered bodies of Spanish troops have been hemmed in by the rebels. It is rumored that a certain proportion of German reserve officers are in the insurgent ranks."

The Correspondencia, published at Madrid, is authority for the statement that naval and military plans to be carried out in the event of war between Spain and the United States have already been formed and approved by Admiral Beranger and General Azcarraga, respectively ministers of marine and war. The home dock yards have become the scenes of the greatest activity and hundreds of adtional men have been employed in each yard to carry out the orders of Admiral Beranger to expedite work upon the war ships and the transports which are being prepared and got in readiness for service.

In a recent Washington dispatch Walter Wellman says: "The Cameron resolution for the recognition of the independence of Cuba is virtually dead. Mr. Olney has killed it with his manifesto. He may or may not be right in his view of the constitutional question involved. It makes no difference. The purpose he desires has been accomplished. The Cameron resolution cannot pass congress. Perhaps before adjournment for the holiday recess, certainly immediately afterward, that statement will be publicly made on the floor of the senate, just as the demise of the Dingley bill was officially announced. It is not unlikely that there will be more or less talk in congress on the resolution, and that Mr. Olney will come in for a great deal of criticism. It is not improbable that there will be from time to time a flurry, which may be followed by a squall in the stock market. But the business men of the country may feel certain that the Cameron resolution will not pass this congress, and that the existing relations between the United States and Spain will remain unchanged until the 4th of next March."

"What! Jeannot believing in a ghost? That is strange indeed!"

"He declared that he had seen it half a dozen times; that it was always at such a place, and that it carried a shovel and strange flames danced along its pathway. I laughed at his credulity, till suddenly he turned and dared me to accompany him, to have proof given me my own eyes."

"Dared you, Felicie? Could old Jeannot have been so insolent and imprudent?"

"Oh, he was perfectly respectful; and remember, I had stung him to retort by my railery and unbelief. He called to me at sunset, as I was on the terrace, that the apparition had passed, and I might see it return if I would hasten to the forest. So I went, mamma."

The countess looked startled.

"It was fortunate the count was absent; what would he have said?"

"Ah, but I knew he was not here, and I trusted to obtain your forgiveness. Yes, mamma, I went with Jeannot, and I saw the ghost."

"You are jesting, Felicie!"

"Not at all; I certainly saw the dark figure, with the spade over his shoulders, and a weird circle of blue light followed him, or, rather, surrounded him. Don't let Jeannot dream of it, but I was truly frightened. It is really very strange, especially if, as Jeannot asserts, there is no trace of human working in the forest, for we heard the blows distinctly."

"This is extremely singular; it must be investigated at once. I did not tell you the rest that your father wrote. He said all Paris was in a ferment of secret agitation. The Assembly are at their wits' end how to remedy the disastrous condition of the whole country; the lower classes are sullen, and have been detected in a vast organization for some unknown purpose. He bade me charge M. Pierre to keep jealous watch over our peasantry, and forbid their leaving the place, or receiving strangers, who might spread among them the incendiary disaffection of the larger towns. I was in hopes there was no need of the caution, but this story of Jeannot's alarms me; of course I reject the supernatural part of it, but that a stranger is lurking around here cannot be doubted, if you have seen him with your own eyes. Ring the bell, my love; I wil speak to M. Pierre at once."

"I wonder my father did not write to M. Pierre his instructions; he knows how disagreable the man is to you!" observed Felicie, as she obeyed.

The countess did not answer; she was gazing thoughtfully upon the floor.

"I will send for Jeannot, too, after M. Pierre is gone," she said at length; "we must neglect no possible precaution."

"What do you fear, mamma? I am sure we have no one on the estate but would willingly risk his own life to save yours, or mine, either, for that matter."

"I was not thinking of myself, Felicie, but of your father; I fear he is not liked by any of our people. He does not understand their trials, and is impatient with them sometimes—I fear they call him a harsh master."

"I am sure I cannot blame them; often and often have I blushed in shame for him, and glowed with indignation for them," answered the candid daughter.

The crimson tide swept over the countess' face, as though it were her own sinfulness Felicie had alluded to.

She waved her hand deprecatingly, and Felicie knew that insinuations against her father would not be listened to.

"Here comes the adorable M. Pierre—I hear that mincing footstep of his. Put on your statliest dignity, mamma. If the peasantry bear malice against others, I am certain they could tear him limb from limb. I am sure it is like a snow-blast whenever he comes near me. Ugh! one must endure loathsome things now and then I suppose."

"Hush, Felicie! M. Pierre is your father's confidential agent."

"But you despise him—you know you do, mamma! Why may not one speak the things they cannot help thinking?"

There was no opportunity for answering. The door was noiselessly unclosed, and a middle aged man, dressed in a tightly fitting suit of snuff colored broadcloth, with silk stockings of the same color, and shining steel knee buckles, came forward, bowing with a singular mixture of servility and audacity.

The low obeisance said plainly—I respect your rank; you are my lady, the countess. But the bold eye and supercilious smile added—you detest me, but I do not care. I am above any harm from you. Let me do or say what I will, you are powerless to send me away.

"You sent for me, my lady—you wish to speak to me," said he, in a smooth, oily voice, bowing once more.

"You are right—I wish for a few moments' conversation. Be seated."

One who had lately seen her gentle and affectionate deportment in the previous conversation with her daughter could not have imagined that queenly dignity was in the power of the Countess Languedoc to assume.

She waved her hand toward the chair beyond her, and M. Pierre, while he shot one swift glance of defiance toward her, accepted it.

"I have received letters from the count, as you are aware, M. Pierre. He desires you to keep vigilant observation upon all that occurs around us. For urgent and sufficient reasons, he wishes you to prevent any of our people leaving the village, and especially charges you to keep away all strangers from meddling with them."

"Humph! I might as well try to empty the basin of the Mediterranean," said M. Pierre, in a querulous tone. "I should like to see the letter, my lady."

The cheek of the countess flushed.

"I have given you his message, M. Pierre, word for word; there is no more in the letter which concerns you."

"Just as your ladyship pleases, I suppose; but if the count were here, I should know what has led to such singular commands—you are quite well aware of that."

The words themselves were not so irritating as the man's manner; the countess seemed to change into an icy statue.

"I am not aware that the correct fulfilment of your master's commands requires any further enlightenment, M. Pierre; at all events, you will receive none from me."

"At least you will refrain from meddling with me," said the man, with suppressed anger. "I cannot manage the obstinate brutes if they are allowed to run to you for redress every half hour."

"I shall not hinder the execution of the count's wishes. I shall certainly refuse to allow you to use unnecessary harshness with our good people," answered she, with icy calmness.

"I thought the question of your interference was settled the last time the count was away," said M. Pierre, with a malicious glance of triumph.

A little glow burned a moment on her pale cheek, and then died out, leaving it whiter still. She had not yet forgotten the humiliating scene when her unfeeling, tyrannical husband had allowed this brutal wretch to trample upon her rights. She had interfered between his angry violence and one of the most faithful of the peasants, and the count had reprimanded her in the very presence of her unworthy opponnet, when the latter had carried to him his audacious complaints.

"M. Pierre," said the countess, in that severe, icy tone, "my husband has peculiar ideas concerning the authority of an overseer over the peasants; I have yet to learn that he will sanction insolence, from that overseer, to the Countess Languedoc."

M. Pierre cast down his eyes, and twirled his hat in silence.

"I wish to ask you concerning these rumors about a strange man with a spade, seen in the Little Forest. Taken in connection with these instructions from the count, it grows significant, and I desire to have it investigated."

M. Pierre's sallow countenance took a still dingier hue.

"An old woman's story, got up by that old driveller, Jeannot!" exclaimed he, testily.

"Then you have heard about it?"

"I could not keep my ears open, your ladyship, and not hear. Some one or other is chattering about it continually," was his hasty reply.

"I conclude that you give the story little credence, by your tone."

"You do not think that such a man has been seen?"

"No one in their senses would believe it. No one of them has ever seen such a man at all," was the decisive but over vehement reply.

"Jeannot is not given to idle stories. I wish, M. Pierre, you would look into the matter, and sift it out thoroughly."

"But, my lady, I assure you there has been no such man seen by any one."

"M. Pierre, Lady Felicie saw him with her own eyes this very night."

M. Pierre with difficulty repressed an oath; his face was fairly convulsed with his efforts to hide his chagrin and confusion.

"I am overwhelmed with astonishment," stammered he; "of course I cannot doubt Lady Felicie's word, but when one is frightened, imagination can go a great way."

Lady Felicie's red lips curled, and she could scarcely hold her quivering voice to calmness as she interposed:

"Though I were ever so terrified, M. Pierre, it would not be likely that my companion and myself should have seen precisely the same apparition."

"You had a companion?"

"I did. We both saw a dark figure with a spade on his shoulder passing along the forest path."

He sat a moment in silence; then crossing himself with a sanctimonious air, exclaimed:

"Jeannot must be right, then; it is a ghost or le diable himself!"

"I think you will find the ghost a substantial one; at all events, I wish you to investigate the matter, and I shall write the count to hasten home to attend to it himself. Now, I wish you good evening, M. Pierre."

The overseer rose, bowed, and was evidently glad to get away. The moment he was gone, Lady Felicie said impressively.

"Mamma, the detestable man knows more about the ghost than he pretends. I verily believe he is at the bottom of it all."

The countess looked perplexed and annoyed, but wisely refrained from adding to her daughter's agitation.

CHAPTER V.

S the days went on the excitement increased concerning the mysterious digger who haunted the Little Forest.

M. Pierre made an ostensibly thorough research, and ended by declaring if such a visitor actually came, it must be that it was by supernatural means.

The countess apparently accepted this decision, and the spot was given a very wide berth when necessity compelled any of the peasantry to approach that locality; while the servants at the chateau grew perfectly frantic with terror, and could not be induced to leave the mansion after sunset for any purpose, however urgent.

The count's arrival was anxiously looked for by all, except M. Pierre, who for reasons of his own was extremely delighted at the unexplained delay. But neither the count, nor any courier or message came.

"Felicie," said the countess, energetically one afternoon when the whole household had shown signs of demoralization, "this will never do; we must find some means to lay the ghost or discover his mortality. I begin to despair of your father's return, and M. Pierre is either purposely indifferent or egregiously stupid. Have you courage to accompany me on a secret visit to the Little Forest? We must work so adroitly that no one will know we are absent from the chateau."

Felicie looked up into the calm, courageous face with a smile, although she shivered a little and turned pale.

"Oh, yes, mamma; I can go anywhere with you. And I feel convinced M. Pierre is at the bottom of it all. But cannot you take Jeannot?"

"No, my love, we can trust each other, but how much farther we can trust our confidence one dare not affirm. We shall be sure of a secret investigation if we go alone. I apprehend no danger, for we will endeavor to keep from sight; and I shall take a brace of the count's pistols with me—you know I am an excellent marksman. If we are molested I shall not hesitate to use them."

Felicie reached up to kiss the grave, calm face.

"Ah, ma chere mere, you can be so grand and stately when you choose. I wonder if our beautiful Austrian queen is any more royal in her bearing. Who would think of the Countess Languedoc setting forth on such an errand? What would my father say?"

"He cannot reasonably be angry when he has left me alone in this contingency with no safer protection than M. Pierre. I confess his absence alarms me. But for that peremptory prohibition of his I should ride to Frejus and consult our friends there. But the extraordinary state of the whole country requires utmost caution, and undoubtedly he can judge better than I of the danger that menaces us all; therefore I prefer to bide by his instructions. What time does the goblin usually appear?"

"Just after sunset—a suspicious hour for a ghost, but indeed the apparition had a most supernatural look. I am afraid your courage will evaporate as mine did."

"We shall see. Give no hint of our intentions to Victoire, but tell her you will not need her assistance for the evening, not even for disrobing. I will keep a watch on the rear entrance, and you must give strict surveillance to the front. It is important to know whether M. Pierre is in the house or not, before we leave."

"How calmly you arrange matters! Dear mamma, I am certain nature meant you for a heroine; you shame my trepidation."

BIG BANK FAILURE.

The National Bank of Illinois Goes Under —Large Deposits.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—The National Bank of Illinois has been suspended by the clearing house. The action suspending the bank was taken at a specially called meeting the Clearing House association committee at the residence of Eldridge Keith, who is secretary of the committee, and was held shortly after midnight. It was shown that the bank had made unwarrantable and unjudicious loans and that in consequence the capital and surplus of the bank have been seriously imperiled. It is believed that many failures will result from the collapse of the National Bank of Illinois. It is the second largest bank in Chicago and was established in 1871. It has a capital stock of one million dollars and a surplus of one million, and $500,000 undivided profits. The amount of money deposited in the bank is $12,000,000.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 23.—The state bank examiner took possession of the Bank of Minnesota. As a result the Union Stock Yards bank also closed. The Bank of Minnesota has $600,000 capital, and is considered one of the strongest in the west. It is the oldest bank in St. Paul, having been established in 1859. Difficulty of making collections is given as the cause.

RADICALS ROUTED.

MADRID, Dec. 24.—A small body of men, carrying a republican flag, assembled at Novelda, province of Alacante, and when called upon to disperse by the gendarmes, refused to do so. They were again ordered to disperse, and upon their second refusal, the gendarmes fired upon them, killing seven of the band. The others then fled precipitately, but the gendarmes pursued and captured several of them. A search was made of the lodgings of the prisoners, and a number of dynamite bombs were found. The police are at a loss to decide whether the assemblage of men was for the purpose of making a demonstration of sympathy for the anarchists sentenced recently at Barcelona, or whether it was a manifestation of republicanism. The finding of the bombs tends to make them believe they were anarchists.

UNITED STATES WARNED.

European Countries Would Not Remain Passive on Cuban Question.

LONDON, Dec. 26.—The Times' Paris correspondent says: The Washington government has been confidentially informed, although in very friendly terms, that the European powers would not remain passive should the United States recognize or encourage the Cuban insurgents. If my information is correct, an intimation has been surther given that Germany, even now, is ready to take Spain's side should the United States show a disposition officially to side with the rebels. These warnings originated in the course of an arrangement for an European coalition against revolutionary socialism.

CUBAN REFORMS READY.

Castillo Says They Will Be Applied at the End of Negotiations.

MADRID, Dec. 27.—Senor Canovas del Castillo, the prime minister, has again affirmed in the presence of his cabinet that he is determined to introduce reforms in Cuba, dating their application from the conclusion of the negotiations carried on with other powers, which are already tending in a direction favorable to Spain. It is said that Senor Canovas referred to the attitude of France, Germany, Austria and Great Britain, the governments of which countries, it is stated, are of the opinion that the United States cannot overstep President Cleveland's message to congress.

GOES UP FOR LIFE.

OMAHA, Dec. 26.—Charles H. Elliott was convicted of the murder of Guy Hutsonpiller, his companion rough rider of the Wild West show. He was sentenced to prison for life. Elliot was arrested at Cedar Rapids, Ia.

Sharkey to Meet Choynski.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 25.—Parson Davies, who is in the city, announces that he has deposited with Al Smith, of New York, $1,000, for a match between Choynski and Sharkey, for a purse of $5,000, which will be offered by Dan Stuart. The fight, if the terms are agreed to by Sharkey, will be pulled off on the same date and the same place as the Corbett-Fitzsimmons contest.

Maher Defeats O'Donnell.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—It just took twenty-seven seconds of time for Peter Maher, the Irish pugilist, to again demonstrate his superiority in ring tactics and hard hitting qualities over Steve O'Donnell, the Australian boxer, in the arena of Greater New York Athletic Club, at Coney Island

PLANETARY POINTS.

SOME HOROSCOPES MADE BY PROF. CUNNINGHAM.

Readers Are Invited to Send in Data and Have Their Indications Printed Free—Planets Indicate Events, but Do Not Cause Them.

THE horoscope of William McKinley made by Prof. Cunningham a year ago indicated that he would become president of the United States March 4, 1897. The astrologer visited the McKinley home at Canton for the purpose of obtaining exact data. He was cordially received by Major McKinley, Mrs. McKinley and the president-elect's aged mother. Prof. Cunningham is at present making a horoscope of the McKinley administration, beginning at noon March 4. It will be printed in March. Persons wishing to have horoscopes made should remember to give Christian name, place of birth and residence, date and year of birth, hour and minute if possible. If you do not know the hour, send two two-cent stamps for particulars. Correspondents should also bear in mind that the astrologer wishes it distinctly understood that he treats the position of the planets at time of birth merely as indications and not causes. A planet may signify an event, like the star of Bethlehem for instance, but of itself it has no other connection with it. Correspondents are answered free in these columns. Address Prof. G. W. Cunningham, Dept. 4, 194 Clinton street, Chicago, Ill.

Answers printed in order as received. Here are some for this week:

Frank, Notre Dame, Ind.

You are above medium height, and well proportioned body; medium to dark complexion, hair and eyes; the eyes have a peculiar sparkle and sharp sight. You are stirring and energetic, and will always have an ambition for a large business, with plenty of rush to it. You are fond of anything that has a mystery connected with it, and are very original and inventive in your ideas. You are also fond of anything pertaining to chemistry and pharmacy. You have good command of language, and you are also a deep thinker, and do not always tell everything you know. You have strong intuitions, and have a good knowledge of many things without ever having had to study to learn about them.

Miss Mary K., Galva, Ill.

You have the zodiacal sign Scorpio, which Mars rules, rising at your birth and therefore Mars is your ruling planet or significator. Scorpio usually denotes a person of medium height; well set and compact figure; rather short limbs; the complexion not very clear and oftentimes freckled; the hair dark and of luxuriant growth; you are reserved and secretive in your nature and keep your business secrets to yourself; you are ambitious, stirring and energetic and inclined to take the lead in anything in which you become interested; you are not very yielding in your disposition and when opposed are liable to lose control of your temper; you are fond of anything that is of a mystical character and easily become interested in anything relating to chemistry; you are a great admirer of surgeons, soldiers, firemen, etc., when they perform any operation that requires skill or any act of bravery, soldiers on dress parade, etc.; you also take quite an interest in war and navy news and all kinds of military affairs.

John M., Brooklyn.

You have the zodiacal sign Leo, which the sun rules, rising at birth and therefore the Sun is your ruling planet or significator. The sign Leo usually denotes a wiry, muscular, slender figure, with wide shoulders in proportion to the rest of the body; the complexion fair and ruddy; the hair and eyes light; the eyes are large and in some cases they would be called "popeyes." You are of a sunny, cheerful temperament; you are charitable and generous, too much so for your own good; you are very restless when not busy at something; you are very apt to borrow trouble in some way or cross bridges before you get to them; you are apparently quick tempered yet seldom get your deep anger aroused; yet when you do you become very fierce like the lion; when your anger is once aroused you will give somebody that was the cause of it the full benefit of your opinion regardless of their position or rank. You have more than average pride and ambition and have a natural gift of language.

Christmas Eve.

Christmas eve was celebrated by nearly every family in this vicinity, generally by gathering at their churches where appropriate exercises were held, and a Christmas tree erected and trimmed in a most beautiful manner. There were a few private trees at homes where sickness kept them from attending the church.

At the Reform church they had two trees a few feet apart with an arch over them, all beautifully decorated with flowers, popcorn and brilliants of various kinds with wax candles etc. Money had been raised for candy, nuts and apples which was distributed among the company. There was a good attendance and all enjoyed themselves.

At the German M. E. church two fine trees were set a few feet apart with Jacobs Ladder set between, all beautifully decorated with all kinds of ornamental decorations which made a very beautiful appearence. Their exercises were short owing to so many of the children having the whooping cough. Nuts, candy and apples were distirbuted to everybody, and a splendid time was enjoyed by all present.

The Germantown church had a tree with appropriate exercises, with singing that is reported as being very fine. The church was full to overflowing and everybody seemed to enjoy themselves.

At the English M. E. church they had one tree beautifully decorated, and the church was finely decorated with garlands of evergreen from each corner of the church, festooned in the center, with a very large doll dressed in white, suspended underneath, representing an angel. The pulpit, organ. lamps etc, were also decorated with evergreen and flowers and with the tree lighted with wax candles made a very inviting appearence.

The exercises were well rendered and with the sacks of candy, nuts and apples distributed made the occasion all that could be desired.

AN ORIENTAL NEW YEARS.

New Year's day in part of the Turkish Orient is the gayest holiday of the year, for it is also the day of St. Basil's festival. The celebration of the two feasts has become inseparable, so to speak, in the minds of the Greeks, and the first of January is now known throughout the Levant as St. Basil's day.

But it is the Greek Church only which honors the saint on that date; the Latin Church observes simply his ordination day, some time in June, while the other Christian denominations have for him merely the same reverence as for the principal Greek Fathers, such as St. Chrysostom, St. Gregory Nazianzen, etc.

The Russians, though following the same ritual as the Greeks, hold no particular celebration on New Year's day in honor of St. Basil; and the true Hellenes, those who live on Greek territory, seldom give importance to a saint's feast on January first. So St. Basil's birthday is distinctly celebrated only by the Greeks who dwell on Turkish territory and are subjects of the sultan.

SCENES ON THE STREET.

They are known as Greek Rayahs. Of their fatherland they have preserved nothing, save the religion and an impure dialect, which varies more or less in every vilayet, or province, and little resembles the harmonious and venerable mother tongue. This dialect in its varieties is by no means the modern Greek, which is a beautiful and very expressive language, rich in constructions, possessing a grammar, and also a vocabulary, almost as extensive as that of the ancient Greek. The Rayah dialects on the other hand are corrupt patois formed with words borrowed from Turkish, Hebrew, Armenian, Italian and French.

Nor does the costume of the Rayahs resemble the true Hellenic dress, but rather that of the Mohammedans.

The ignorance, debasement and sluggishness of the Rayahs are extreme, notwithstanding the efforts of the Greek government to supply them with educational institutions, in the hope that they may rise against their oppressors and succeed in shaking off their yoke. But it is likely to be long before these descendants of a noble race shall appreciate the philanthropic efforts of their freed brethren.

At present they have adopted nearly all the Turkish fashions, and lack ambition to improve their condition. They are fond of their ease, love drinking and smoking, and care for nothing beyond their material welfare.

Still they have remained faithful to their religion nevertheless; and follow all its rites with a respectful and blindly superstitious obedience. They observe all the holidays of the church, but prefer above all St. Basil's day.

Popular tradition represents St. Basil as a venerable man, clad in bishop's vestments, carrying incense, myrrh and other Oriental perfumes. He is supposed to come on the eve of his birthday, reputed as January 1st old style—January 12th according to the Gregorian calendar—and distribute presents to children. He is the patron saint of the home and of the young. From Armenia to the Archipelago, and from the Black Sea to Syria, there is not a Rayah child who does not regard its New Year's presents as positive proof of his coming.

Among the young he ranks as high as St. Nicholas in Russia, Germany and other countries; but among the old he is held in great veneration as one of the most eminent Greek Fathers, and also as the most eloquent promoter of monasticism throughout the East. Besides, he was a great philanthropist, and an ardent apostle.

Caesarea, the capital of the former province of Cappadocia, was St. Basil's native place. At the age of thirty-three he was made a presbyter, and a few years later bishop of the same city, a position which he held until his death, A. D. 379.

Elaborate preparations are made for his festival, which begins at an early hour on the evening of December 31st. The shopkeepers adorn their windows with an attractive medley of toys and holiday gifts. Oranges, dried and fresh fruit, imported and domestic table delicacies, candies, cakes, are either displayed in the show-cases or piled up in front of the stores, which are extravagantly lighted up for the occasion, and decorated with garlands of colored paper skilfully cut out in the shape of natural flowers. From the ceilings, from the top of the windows, they fall in the chandeliers, from the pictures, from grouped festoons.

The mild climate permits a large and variegated crowd to circulate through the streets and gather in the stores, and no sight is more picturesque than a street in the East on St. Basil's eve.

There are to be seen people of communities and races having nothing in common but the land and the surrounding atmosphere; there are curious contrasts of complexion and wearing apparel; there the genuine attire of five races is on constant exhibition.

You see, for instance, the long, loose robes of the Jews, and the bright red or yellow silk garments worn by their wives. There are the short, wide breeches of the Turks, contrasting with the long ones of the Rayahs. The small red fez and the large vermillion one, designed to hang down on one side of the face like the Phrygian cap, are intermingled with the plain Derby and black silk hats of the European gentlemen, whose simple attire is made obtrusively plain by the bright-colored goods used by the natives.

Conceive, too, the variety of garments worn by the women. Imagine, for instance, the Parisian dress and bonnet of a European merchant's daughter, side by side with the loose yellow breeches, the lilac doublet and the long green veil of a wealthy Armenian lady! Every day one sees em-

Among men it is not uncommon to behold bare legs and gorgeous holiday turbans; often a gallant Mohammedan, covered with rags and filth, carries in his belt an assortment of Damascus blades, yataghans and jewel-encrusted firearms, worth a small fortune.

Two singular customs contribute to this holiday's particular character; one is the making of "St. Basil's cake," the other the singing of a song through the streets on the eve of the saint's alleged birthday.

Elaborate preparations for the kneading of the cake begin in every house two days, at least, before the festival, for much labor is involved in its confection. All the women of the family squat on a rug, in the Turkish fashion, around a low, circular pastry-table, and amidst gay stories and laughter the rolling-pin runs over the rich paste, while the housewives vie in decorating and forming the cakes.

The commonest decorations are Oriental arabesques representing palms, flowers, shells, or grotesque figures with which to amuse the children, while the most skilful workers make dolls whose faces are red eggs firmly embedded in the paste.

These would seem simple to an American housekeeper; but in a country where cooking utensils and baking ovens are very rude, the undertaking requires much patience.

The cake consists of butter, eggs and sugar, and its flavoring is of certain spices. It is usually made very rich, so that it may keep soft for days after it is baked.

Housekeepers dread the task, for a large quantity of St. Basil's cake is made in each family. A large part of it is destined for the hospitals, the children's and orphan's asylums, the prisons and the poor; another part is given away to callers, to servants and to the boys who come round in the early evening to sing St. Basil's song.

New Year's eve is a great time for the Rayah boys. As soon as they ring the bell of a house the door is thrown open and the voice of the master is heard, saying:

"Let the boys in at once! Give them money, fruit, and all that they can carry of St. Basil's cake. Come on, servants, fill their pockets while they give us their song!"

Then the poor children, delighted by the warm welcome of the host and the profusion of dainty things given them, sing with frenzy the romantic little tale of St. Basil, which ends with the calling down of numerous blessings on the generous family during the new year.

But the strangest thing of all is neither St. Basil's song nor St. Basil's cake; it is a curious mistake as to date which has prevailed among the Greek Rayahs for many generations. For history declares that the 1st day of January is not the anniversary of St. Basil's birth, but that of his death! —Alcide de Andria, in Youth's Companion.

Ancient and Modern New Year's Festival

The first day (calends) of January, as marking the beginning of the year, was observed as a public holiday in Rome from at least the time of the Julian reformation of the calendar. Ovid alludes to the abstinence from litigation and strife, the smoking altars, the white-robed processions to the capitol; and later writers describe the exchanges of visits, the giving and receiving of presents (strenae), the masquerading, and the feasting with which the day was in their time celebrated throughout the empire. Libanius (c. 346 A. D.) speaks of it as being in his day the one great holiday common to all under the Roman rule. When, about the fifth century, the 25th of December had gradually become a fixed festival commemorative of the nativity, the 1st of January ultimately also assumed a specially sacred character as the octave of Christmas day and as the anniversary of the circumcision of our Lord, and as such it still figures in the calendars of the various branches of the eastern and of the western church, though only as a feast of subordinate importance.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 21.—Cameron, from the committee on foreign relations, reported a resolution recognizing Cuban independence. He moved that it be laid upon the table and said it would not be called up until after the holidays. Vest offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the president is not vested by the constitution with exclusive power to determine when the independence of a foreign people struggling to establish a government for themselves shall be recognized by the United States, but this power is vested in congress and the president to be exercised in conformity with section 7, article 1, in the constitution.

Hill offered a substitute resolution acknowledging belligerency in Cuba and proclaiming the neutrality of the United States. Several other resolutions were offered, but all went over. The Call resolution asking for a report on American citizens held in Spanish prisons was agreed to.

HOUSE.

Senate amendments to immigration bill, providing that immigrants must be able to read and write, were non-concurred in and a conference ordered. The house spent the remainder of the day in consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

SENATE.

Washington, Dec. 23.—Pettigrew's resolution directing the secretary of the treasury to pay the amount due on the 6 per cent trust notes of the Union Pacific railway company and to take possession of the bonds and stocks now held as collateral for them, and appropriating ten million dollars for the purpose, came up. Pettigrew spoke in favor of it and was followed by Morgan in opposition. Adjourned till January 5.

HOUSE.

The house to-day finished consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill and it was passed, after which adjournment was taken to January 5.

LATE ORIENTAL ADVICES.

The Mohammedan Rebellion in North China Comes to an End.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 24.—Advices received from Tokio via the steamer Belgic are as follows: A terrible accident occurred October 27 on the Fuji river, a stream celebrated for its rapids, the shooting of which in especially constructed boats is one of the delights of tourists. Eighteen youths hired a boat to travel down the rapids. When the boat approached the Yabuga rapid, which is the most dangerous, the boatmen asked the party to land and re-embark below the rapids. They refused, the boat was upset and thirteen of the tourists and three boatmen were drowned.

The Mohammedan rebellion in the north of China is at an end, according to an official decree issued November 9. The number of Mohammedans that fought is put by the decree at 200,000, all of whom have been either annihilated or driven into the mountains between Kansu and Thibet, where they are gradually being hemmed in.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 24.—Dr. Thomas Powell, of Missouri, made some remarkable experiments before a number of doctors to prove the efficiency of his remedy for certain diseases. He alarmed some of the physicians present by injecting bacilli tuberculosis and bacilli diphtheria into himself, appearing to take them without any evil effect. He also injected some bacteria into two guinea pigs, which promptly died. He says he will inject sputum from a dying consumptive into himself.

Questions and Answers Relating to Patents

DES MOINES, Dec. 24.—J. V. D., of Belmond, Iowa, has submitted questions to which we answer as follows:

2.—An application in this country is, by international agreement, protection for six months in most of the foreign countries that grant patents to Americans.

3.—No one outside of the United States patent office has a right to know anything about an application that has not been granted.

4.—Yes, we have the official records of all United States patents issued since 1850 to date, and can generally tell when prior claims interfere with ideas or inventions presented now.

5.—Principles and results are not patentable and the same objects and results may be obtained by inventions that differ from each other in construction, in a patentable sense, so that two machines for the same purpose may each be patented by different persons and used without either one being an infringement of the other's rights.

JOYS OF MATERNITY.

Vigorous Mothers and Sturdy Children Are Always Admired.

Why so Many Women Are Childless—A Problem That Has Puzzled Physicians for Centuries.

Reproduction is a law of nature, and no picture of joy and happiness can equal that of the vigorous mother and her sturdy child.

Nature makes but few mistakes, and every thoughtful person must admit that a cause exists, why so many women are childless.

The subject baffles the theories of physicians. Such cases are curable nine times out of ten, as evidenced by thousands of letters on file at Mrs. Pinkham's office. Many a darling baby owes its existence to Mrs. Pinkham's advice and the Vegetable Compound. This is not to be wondered at when such testimony as the following explains itself:

"I have taken three bottles of your Vegetable Compound, one package of Sanative Wash, one box of Liver Pills; and now I have a dear little babe four weeks old, and I am well. I have to thank you for this.

"I have spent $200.00 for doctor's bills without obtaining any relief. For my cure I only spent $5.00.

"I had been a victim of female troubles in their worst form; suffered untold agonies every month; had to stay in bed, and have poultices applied, and then could not stand the pain.

"My physician told me if I became pregnant I would die. I had bladder trouble, itching, backache, catarrh of the stomach, hysteria and heart trouble, fainting spells and leucorrhœa. Can you wonder that I sing the praises of a medicine that has cured me of all these ills?"—MRS. GEO. C. KIRCHNER, 872 Belmont Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction

BONANZA FORTUNES GONE.

Inheritors of California Millions Now an Almost Penniless Crowd.

California has long had the reputation as the home of the bonanza king and a recently issued document, based on the records of the San Francisco Probate court, tells an interesting story of the contests and entanglements which have massed about the last testament of many famous millionaires and the final disposition of the vast sums they left behind them, says Denver Field and Farm. The document gives the history of fifty-three wills, disposing of $175,000,000. About 400 heirs divided the vast sum and to-day nearly half of that number are penniless again and only a few succeeded in adding to their inheritance. The average number of persons provided for in each was ten, though in a number of instances, the most notable of which was the case of Florence Blythe, the entire estates passed into the hands of single heirs. The comparatively small estate of Kate Johnson, which was appraised at $1,250,000, reached more heirs than any other, the number on the list being twenty-five, while the $4,000,000 of Thomas Blythe went to one child, Florence, after a celebrated trial. The estate of Maria Coleman was valued at $1,757,000 and it went equally to three heirs. Charles Crocker's $22,000,000 reached six persons, while Mary Ann Crocker's $11,883,657 went share and share alike to four of the six who got Charles Crocker's larger fortune. Peter Donahue's $3,708,312 went in equal parts to three heirs. Mrs. Theresa Fair's $4,693,250 went to three persons—Charles L. Fair, Miss Virginia Fair and Mrs. Charles Oelrichs—while William P. Fuller distributed his $1,771,262 to seven persons of his name. Emmanuel Goldstein's $1,000,000 went to six heirs, George Hearst's $8,788,137 went in equal parts to his wife and son, while Walter Hobart's $5,273,366 went in thirds to his three children—Walter Hobart, Miss Ella Hobart and Mrs. Wenthrop Lester. Mary Hopkins' $20,694,762 went to two persons. Robert C. Johnson's $1,910,550 went to eleven persons in almost equal portions. There are a few exceptions to the general course of estates, as in the case of Lick and Stanford. The $5,000,000 of the Lick estate went chiefly to one heir and to a number of trusts of a public nature created before James Lick's death. Charles McLaughlin left his $2,476,000 to his widow, while Alexander Montgomery's $2,356,845 went to three heirs. Daniel T. Murphy's $2,041,670 went to six heirs. William S. O'Brien's $9,655,450 reached eight persons. James left an even million, which reached four persons in shares and a number of small bequests. A. J. Pope's $1,660,000 reached four heirs. Washington Ryer left $1,276,398 to fifteen persons. Leland Stanford's $17,688,319 went to four persons and the trust for the university.

MENELEK'S INDEPENDENCE.

Not Such a Barbarian as Is Commonly Supposed.

The pope's influence has failed to secure the release of the Italian prisoners in Abyssinia. It is said that his shrewd councillors disapproved an attempt so little likely to succeed at a time when his holiness cannot afford to risk the papal prestige; but a generous pity overcame their reasoned objections. As if to emphasize the refusal, Menelek has set free sixty-four officers and men of his own accord. They report that the Abyssinian monarch is not such a barbarian as is commonly supposed. He reads the leading Italian journals through an interpreter—it is well for the prisoners mean exactly by "many," stand them himself. Menelek desires to make himself equal to the European sovereigns; and this fact represents progress, for all his predecessors firmly believed themselves to be already equal or superior. The Italian officers are frequently questioned about the manners and customs of royalty in Europe. His queen actually wears dresses from Paris and stockings, shoes, etc. Many French families are settled at and near Entotto, where the negus has a palace, and they supply these articles. One would like to know what the prisoners mean exactly by "many." It may be credited, however, that Abyssinia is about to undergo a change, with Russians and Frenchmen to direct it; and, in that case, the sooner Egypt gets command of the upper waters of the Nile the better for her safety. To occupy the Sudan would be the first move of the energetic negus, who felt himself strong enough to organize a grand attack upon the hereditary foe, says the London Standard. And if he got possession of the Sudan, self-interest would tempt him to divert the Nile, putting ill-will towards Egypt aside.

"Well, when my grandfather resigned his position as cashier of a country bank, they traced him as far as China, but he got away."

The Success of Henry G. Thorell.

Henry G. Thorell, whose postoffice address is Holdredge, Neb., was at one time a carriage maker in Chicago. He removed to Nebraska in 1877. That he has reason to be satisfied is proven by the fact that he is to-day worth $30,000, every cent of it made on his farm. Last year (1896) he had 250 acres in corn, 250 acres in small grain, 26 horses, 50 head of cattle and 150 hogs.

In our "Nebraska Book" (40 pages with maps and illustrations) are dozens of statements like that of Mr. Thorell. They are made by farmers who have made a success of farming. They show that Nebraska is as good as any state in the Union.

The book in which they appear is as different from the ordinary agricultural pamphlet as day is from night. It is interesting, practical, truthful. In a staightforward, simple fashion, it tells you everything you need to know about Nebraska—its climate, people, schools, churches, railroads, markets, soil and crops. It explains why the Nebraska farmer makes money in spite of low prices and hard times. Why land is cheap. And how it is as easy for an intelligent and industrious man to BUY a Nebraska farm as it is to rent one in any state east of the Missouri river.

Every farm renter who wants to become a farm-owner; every farm-owner who is tired of trying to make money off high-priced land; every father who wants to give his sons a start on the high road to independence, should write for a copy. Free.

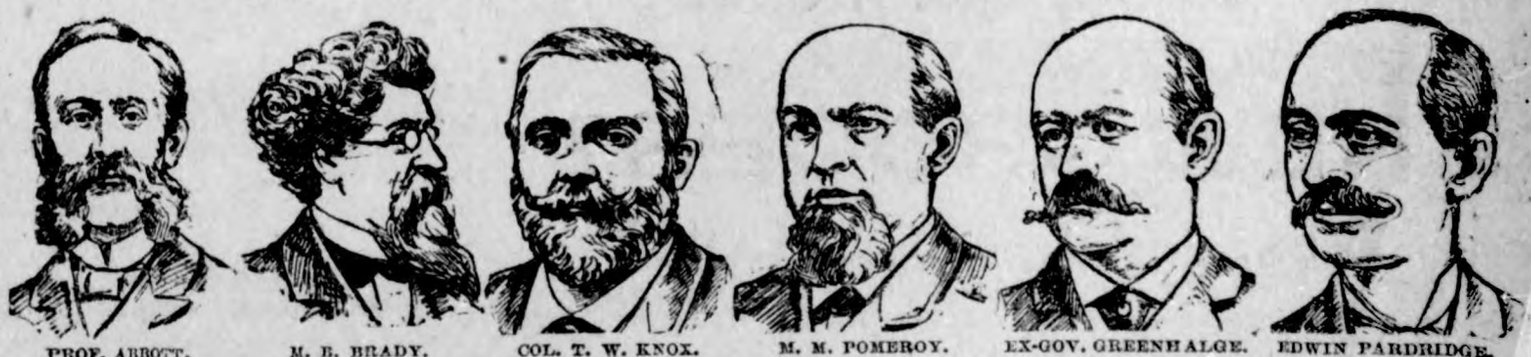
AMONG THE DEAD OF THE YEAR.

These Prominent Men All Died of That Great Modern Curse—Bright's Disease.



PROF. ABBOTT. M. B. BRADY. COL. T. W. KNOX. M. M. POMEROY. EX-GOV. GREENHALGE. EDWIN PARDRIDGE.

The year just closed has furnished an alarming array of prominent men who have died of Bright's disease of the kidneys. The number includes Professor Austin Abbott, the great jurist and author of law books; M. B. Brady, the famous photographer; Col. Thos. W. Knox, the author of the "Boy Travellers"; Mark M. Pomeroy, the well-known editor; Mr. Edwin Pardridge, the prominent Chicago merchant; and ex-Governor Greenhaige, of Massachusetts.

If "death loves a shining mark," it is also certain that Bright's disease finds its victims among the prominent as well as among the millions of people who are suffering with it to-day, and yet do not realize this serious fact.

There are men and women in every portion of America who feel out of sorts, and who do not realize what it is that affects them. They may have peculiar pains in various parts of the body, strange lassitude, a bad taste in the mouth, pains in the back and about the loins, and a general irregularity of the system.

These things mean Bright's Disease in some one of its various stages, and no man or woman is safe who has them.

This terrible disease was once considered incurable. Eminent doctors so declared, but constant scientific and chemical experiments resulted in a discovery, which is an absolute cure for Bright's disease, even in its advanced stages. It is the one and only known remedy for this terrible complaint; its name is Warner's Safe Cure.

It is simply marvelous how many people are to-day kept in perfect health and strength through its use. It has a pleasing, soothing and quieting effect upon the kidneys, and all adjacent organs. It relieves promptly, puts the system in a condition of health, and substitutes happiness for misery. Testimonials of its great power could be furnished by the thousands, but all intelligent men and women, as well as the medical profession, know its great power and the grand work it is doing in the world.
